ALL WORKING TOGETHER FOR GRAND TRUNK

Officials of the Grand Trunk Railroad, Boston business men and members of the Massachusetts Legislature began on aggressive campaign to-day for the necessary legislation to extend the railroad to the port of Boston.

The Legislature has already provided $9,000,000 for the development of the port, and the question of providing $50,000,000 for this purpose is under consideration.

The Grand Trunk officials declare that they stand ready to begin work at once, and that when the road reaches this city Boston will be within four days of the Pacific coast.

Edward M. Fitzhugh, vice-president of the Grand Trunk Railroad and president of the Southern New England Railroad Company, held a conference to-day at the Touraine with Judge Thomas W. Kneeland of Palmer, counsel for the roads, as to the most effective procedure before the Legislature.

Ask $50,000,000 for Port.

The Boston City Council met to-day to take action in advocacy of the legislation necessary to the building of the extensions desired by the Grand Trunk Company.

President George S. Smith of the Boston Chamber of Commerce urges the expenditure of $50,000,000 on the port of Boston. He says that because of the diversity of Boston's industries it is possible to double the city's population within two decades.

Mr. Fitzhugh arrived from Montreal last night, with George C. Jones, general manager of the Central Vermont, Judge Kneeland and Cy Warman, general assistant of the Grand Trunk, were waiting at the hotel, and a short session was held before the men retired.

President Charles S. Mellen of the New Haven road, Boston & Maine roads was also at the hotel, but did not meet Mr. Fitzhugh, although each knew of the other's presence.

Mr. Warman gave out the following statement expressing Mr. Fitzhugh's views on the situation:

Had Long Cherished Plan.

He wants it understood that he is very much in earnest, and, if the authority sought is granted, that there will be no delay in taking further steps to arrange for the construction of the lines for which charters have been asked.

As a matter of fact, invasion of New England has been the Hon. Mr. Hugh's mind for a good many years. When he was placed in charge of the Central Vermont he determined to make a railway of that system, and having succeeded in doing so, his next ambition was to win the board of directors of the Grand Trunk to his scheme of expansion and the creation of what he is now working out as the Grand Trunk's New England system. This was about 1898.

For a short period, however, he left Vermont to go with President Hays to the Southern Pacific, but he returned when President Hays returned to the Grand Trunk and was again placed in charge at St. Albans.

Mr. Fitzhugh returned to the Grand Trunk as vice-president in charge of all departments, but he retained his interest in the Central Vermont—in fact he was in actual control of that all the time until last January, when he was relieved of his active duties on the Grand Trunk proper to become president of the Southern New England and subsidiary companies.

Therefore it is very gratifying to Mr. Fitzhugh to find public sentiment in favor of his plans and such evidence

AGED QUINCY MAN KILLED BY TRAIN

John Queeny, sixty-six years old, of Spear street, Quincy, was killed by a New Haven train early to-day near President's bridge, Quincy. His body was found near the outward track at 7:30 by John Manning, gatekeeper of the Brooks Adams estate on Adams street. Mr. Queeny for twenty-seven years had been employed on the Kendall farm in Braintree. He lost the position several years ago by a change of owners. One of his sons identified the body.

IN "MR. MEESON'S WILL."

As you recall the Rider Haggard story, a greatly needed will was tattooed on a girl's back. That was fiction. Now it has happened in fact, for Lieutenant Schorvoder has inscribed the fortifications of Posen on the sweetheart's skin, in order to put them in Russia's hands. A page story, illustrated, in the Sunday AMERICAN.

WOMEN SAVED BY LADDERS IN BACK BAY FIRE

Fifteen men and women fled, jostling, stumbling and screaming, down a smoke-choked rear stairway in a panic of self-preservation during a two-alarm fire in the five-story apartment house at No. 84 St. Botolph street, corner of Fulton street, in the Back Bay section to-day.

Five other women and two other men were taken down ladders from upperstory windows by firemen. Others escaped down the front stairways. The screams of frightened women and the shouts of men filled the air and roused the neighborhood for blocks around. The actual fire damage was kept down to $2,000, but, in escapes, rescues and other features, the fire was spectacular.

The fire started in the basement probably from an overheated furnace. The entire basement and five upper floors were quickly filled with smoke.

District Chief Byron, who came on the first alarm, ordered a second round when he saw the smoke curling from the upper windows. Chief Mullen came on the second alarm and took charge.

Carried Down Ladders.

The firemen were able to work to good advantage, both in fighting the fire and in making rescues, because the building is on a corner, with good approach offered on two sides. But the smoke went up through every apartment so rapidly that the firemen had their hands full—especially the laddermen—for a few minutes, carrying or assisting men and women down the ladders.

Fifteen people rushed pell-mell down the back stairs when the first smoke appeared in the back hallway. Becoming confused in the smoke they were panic-stricken. Some fell and others stumbled over them. Women screamed shrilly and pandemonium reigned for a few minutes in the smoke-darkened halls. But all the fifteen who came out in that first flight down the rear stairs escaped to the open. None was seriously hurt, but many were bruised by bumping against one another or against the woodwork. All were frightened and some of the women suffered nervous shocks that affected them greatly.

Pandemonium Reigned.

Miss Marie J. Perry, living on the top floor, says she was one who fled panic-stricken down the rear stairway. She said later:

"My apartments were filled with smoke almost before I knew it. I opened the front door of my suite and clouds of smoke rolled in. I ran back to the rear hall and heard people trying to get something down the stairs. I got out that way somehow. I scarcely know how."

A male lodger, who would not give his name, said:

"We bumped and jostled against one another in the rush down the back stairs. Some fell, but got up again and kept on. It was terrible."

Meanwhile the firemen were taking other lodgers out of windows on the St. Botolph street front and on the Fulton street side of the building.

Miss Adeline Hotchkinson, a maid on the fifth floor, ran to the front hall, but was driven back by smoke. Then she darted to the back hall, but was appalled by the sight of the panic down the stairways. She went to a window and was carried down a ladder by men of Ladder 15.

Calls Husband on 'Phone.

Mrs. L. M. Mance, on the second floor, smelled smoke. She called her husband's place of business on the telephone. Mr. Mance told her:

"Rouse the others if they are not out."

Mrs. Mance ran across the hall and called Miss Dougal, who was sleeping late in her apartments opposite. Miss Dougal dressed hastily and was taken down a ladder. Mrs. Mance went back to tell her husband at the telephone, when Lieutenant Adams and a lieutenant of Engine 33 appeared at one of the bedroom windows and called her to the window. Mrs. Mance was taken down the ladder.

Mrs. H. C. Clark and Mrs. Brown of the third floor had started shopping when the fire engines came. They ran back to the building in fear for their valuables. They started to enter the place, but were driven back by men that they could not get in. Later they were assured that only smoke damage was done to their home.

In another third-floor suite live Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Smith. Mrs. Smith picked up her pet black bird, and, assisted by Mr. Smith, got safely down the front stairway.

Miss Ethel Hedley was carried down a ladder by firemen from the fifth floor.

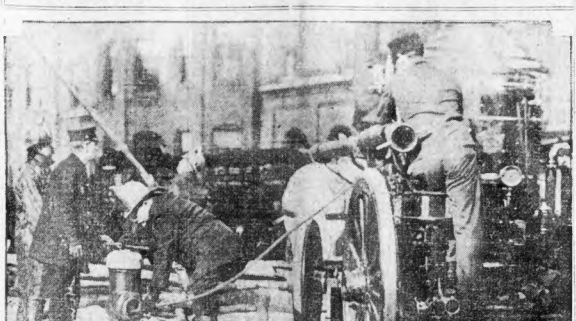
Miss Hedley and Fred Lalth were among the fifth floor lodgers. They found the stairway clouded with smoke. They ran to a front window. District Chief Byron spied them at the window and immediately ordered an extension ladder put in place. Firemen took Miss Hedley bodily out from the window and carried her down the ladder. Lalth came down the ladder without assistance.

James Lewis, an aviator, living in suite 6, top floor, came down the same ladder.

On the first floor lodges Emiliano Renaud, a player in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A sheet of flames burst into his room. He threw precious musical instruments into a trunk, jammed a few other personal effects into it and got the trunk and lug out of the window and escaped after them.

Though the distance to the ground was short, Emiliano was considerably shaken up. But he was more concerned for his musical instruments than for himself.

Thawing Hydrant to Get Water for Back Bay Fire.



Although the firemen were able to work to good advantage they were handicapped by a frozen hydrant. This picture, by a Boston American staff photographer, shows District Chief Byington superintending the thawing-out process by means of a hose from the steamer to the hydrant.

U. S. TROOPS GET READY FOR CUBA

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Five thousand American troops on the Atlantic coast stations today were given instructions to be ready to proceed to Cuba on short notice should American intervention as threatened by President Taft become necessary.

The entire Atlantic fleet now in Cuban waters was ordered to co-operate with the army should extreme measures be resorted to.

These are the steps taken to-day by the army and navy to back up the American Note to President Gomez yesterday. The administration hopes that the warning given the Cubans will be sufficient to quiet them down but no chances are being taken.

Troops Being Equipped.

At the War Department to-day Gen. Leonard Wood said that the army was being equipped now for an expedition to Cuba.

He would not indicate the commands which might be ordered.

Gen. Wood would only say that the American troops for the Cuban services would be taken from the army posts along the Atlantic seaboard or near the coast.

As for the navy, it was announced at the navy department that he entire fleet on the Atlantic coast was within twenty-four hours of Havana. Three warships were sent South a few days ago to engage in the Winter manoeuvres off Guantanamo. They are now within wireless call of the Cuban coast.

At the State Department to-day the statement was made that no reply had been received by this government to the note sent to President Gomez yesterday by President Taft. All that was received was a dispatch from Minister Beaupre, saying that the note had been delivered by him to the Cuban government.

May Avert Revolution.

From official information in the hands of the State Department, the officials believe the warning given the Cubans will avert the threatened revolution.

However, both the army and navy services are busy to-day figuring upon supplies and equipment for the occupation of the Island.

It is said at the State Department and the White House that a reasonable time will be allowed the Cubans to show they mean to abandon the revolution and to maintain peace and order. Just what the administration means by a reasonable time could not be learned.

SNOW SHOVELLER APPLICANT WOMAN

DUNKIRK, N. Y., Jan. 17.—A woman disguised in man's clothing applied for work as a snow shoveller at the Lake Shore railroad yards to-day.

Discovery of her sex was made when she broke down and wept after being told there was no work. She said her husband was unable to work and her children were starving.

TAFT PLEA FOR ECONOMY BOARD

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—In a special message to Congress to-day, President Taft makes an earnest plea for an appropriation of $300,000 in order that the special Commission on Efficiency and Economy, which is investigating the various departments of the government, may continue its work for the ensuing year. This was one of the commissions that was slated to pass out of existence, as a result of the Democratic program of economy. Harrey S. Chase of Boston is one of its members.

To support his plea, the President submits a brief outline of the work that has been accomplished since July, 1910, when the commission began its work, and states that over $2,000,000 per year has already been saved as a result of the investigation, and the foundation laid for the annual saving of many more millions.

While the commission's report will not be completed for some time, the President, in mentioning some of the things accomplished up to date, states that it will recommend the abolishment of the various outer service, which costs the government over two and a half million dollars each year. In the opinion of the commission, its varied activities can be performed with equal or greater, advantage by other services. The commission, therefore, recommends that it be abolished. It is estimated that by so doing a saving of not less than $1,000,000 a year can be made.

In order that the government may be held responsible for the money that it spends, the President urge the adoption of an annual budget similar to that which exists in European countries, which will show in detail whether the moneys appropriated have been economically spent and whether every division or office has been efficiently run. In this connection the President takes occasion to state that the United States is the only great nation whose government is operated without a budget.

The extension of civil service so as to include local offices under the departments of the Treasury, the Interior, the Postoffice and Commerce and Labor, which was recommended by the President in a recent message, is treated at considerable length. According to the President, the removal of these local offices would result not only in the saving of a vast amount of money, but also in increased efficiency in every department.

"As long as local offices are within the sphere of politics patronage," says the President, "it is difficult to consider the establishment or discontinuance of local offices, apart from the effect upon local political situations. It also necessitates the President and members of Congress devoting to matters of patronage time which is distracted that by so doing a saving and administration. That there are a number of such offices now existing which, according to the President, the removal of the service

URGES PLEA FOR A NEW COUNCIL

The abolition of the Executive Council was urged at a public hearing before the Legislative Committee on Constitutional Amendments to-day by Henry Sterling, a prominent local labor leader, and James W. Stillman of Boston.

Two bills affecting the Executive Council both sponsored by Mr. Sterling, were considered by the committee. One abolishes the present Council and transfers its duties to the House of Representatives. The other creates a new Council, to consist of the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Secretary of State, Treasurer, State Auditor, Attorney General, the chairmen of the Railroad, Gas and Electric, Highway and Harbor and Land Commissions, and the Tax and Insurance Commissioners.

Mr. Sterling compared the executive council to the vermiform appendix, stating that it occupies much the same place in the body politic that the appendix does in the physical body. He said what is needed is a system of co-ordination, by which the Governor may have the benefit of the advice of men intimately connected with the business of the State, just as the President has in Washington.

James W. Stillman of Boston favored the bill abolishing the present Council, because of his belief that the Governor should have "a free hand to pardon the two unfortunate men now under sentence of death."

STATE HOUSE NOTES

The total number of certificates of incorporation issued to new corporations during the past fiscal year was 1,776, an increase of 200 over the year before, according to the annual report of the Secretary of State presented to the Legislature to-day.

The State Board of Education, in its seventy-fifth annual report, submitted to the Legislature to-day, reports a steady growth in vocational education in the State. The attendance of the independent industrial schools now reaches over 6,000 pupils. There are sixteen of these schools and seventeen evening schools, and twelve schools doing part-time work.

MEN WHO HOLD FATE OF PHELPS AND RICHESON

The Executive Council of the State to-day decides whether Silas N. Phelps, now in the Charlestown prison, shall live or be electrocuted next Sunday, or during next week.

The action of the Council will be of peculiar interest because it may reflect the attitude of the members on the case of Clarence V. T. Richeson, condemned for the murder of Avis Linnell.

If Phelps is doomed, then no one can see any hope for Richeson. Even if Phelps is saved, Richeson may be electrocuted.

The fate of Phelps depends upon eight votes, there being one vacancy as a result of the resignation of John Quinn, who was appointed sheriff.

See Chance for Phelps.

The friends of Phelps think that he has a chance. The Governor favors the commutation of his sentence. There is much to be said in favor of the mountaineer who shot and killed Emmett Hoskins, a deputy sheriff who invaded, or attempted to invade, his house at night in company with a posse of men bent on arresting Phelps. The condemned man says he did not know the man he shot was a deputy sheriff.

The attitude of the eight members of the Council, which includes Lieutenant-Governor Luce, regarding Phelps is not known. The former Council voted against a commutation of the sentence.

Bitter Feeling Against Richeson.

The entrance of the Richeson case into the Phelps case may have a bearing on the vote to-day. The feeling throughout the State is very bitter against Richeson, and most people will regard death for Phelps as spelling death for Richeson.

Mr. Luce is opposed to capital punishment. It is believed that he would vote for a commutation of the Phelps death sentence. Councillor Fletcher does not believe in the death penalty except in extreme cases.

It is believed that he can be counted on in favor of Phelps. On the other hand, it is believed that Councillors Cushing and Goetting will be for the death penalty.

Councillors Winfield S. Schuster, Edward G. Frothingham, Eben S. Keith and Alexander S. McGregor are doubtful, having expressed no opinion as to capital punishment in the Phelps or any other case.

Silas N. Phelps opened his eyes in his cell in Charlestown State Prison to-day knowing that his last hope of life will either be confirmed or blasted before he lies down to-night. To-day's meeting of the Governor's Council is the last occasion upon which the sentences of death, under which he lies awaiting execution, can be commuted to life imprisonment or a lighter sentence.

The Governor has not as yet presented to the new Council any petition for clemency from the doomed man. Whether he will do so to-day or not is doubtful. Before the last Council passed out of office Governor Foss used every effort to save the Monroe Bridge murderer from the chair.

A copy of a deposition made by Miss Patsy Feltz of Colorado Springs, in which she tells of questioning her about Richeson, is now under sentence of death in the Charles Street Jail for the murder of Avis Linnell, became engaged in 1900, while he was a student in Wilson Jewett College in Liberty, Mo., and telling in detail of her intimacy with him, is on its way to District Attorney Pelletier from Miss Feltz, it became known to-day.

Miss Violet Edmunds, fiancee of the self-confessed murderer, recently wrote to the Colorado Springs girl about Richeson, as Miss Feltz's reply to this letter, it is said, the affidavit in question was referred to, and a full history of Richeson's doings in Missouri, was given.

of co-operation on the part of the port directors and others interested in the development of the port of Boston.

From the attitude of President Fitzhugh it is evident that President Hays is serious in his intention to build the line from Windsor, Vt., across New Hampshire and Massachusetts to Boston, to construct the branch from Boston to Blackstone and the cross-country road from Douglas to Worcester as quickly as possible.

President Hays and President Fitzhugh are anxious that the railroads to Boston, Providence and Worcester be completed and ready for operation by the time the last spike is driven on the Grand Trunk-Pacific, now under construction from Moncton, N. B., to Prince Rupert, B. C.

Hundreds of miles east and west of Winnipeg are ready for operation but it may be a couple of years before the long road across the continent is finished.

During this period of construction the Grand Trunk wishes to build the 130 miles or so that separate the Central Vermont at Windsor from a Boston terminal, in order that Boston may be one of the terminals of the system on the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Aims of New Road Heads.

The purpose of the Southern New England Railway, it will be argued before the committee of the Legislature, is to give Boston and New England a direct rail connection with the great grain country of the Canadian West and Northwest, to place the manufacturers of New England in touch with the market of the growing agricultural and purchasing sections of the Dominion.

The idea of President Hays is to stimulate commerce by adding Boston and the New England manufacturing centers to a line that will stretch across the continent and will be the longest railroad in the world under one management.

The Southern New England from Boston will be, in fact, a part of the trans-continental trunk line as is the section of track which is now being laid across the Rocky Mountains in British Columbia.

It is for the purpose of shortening the distance from the New England factory to the farmer of Western Canada and putting the manufacturer in touch with the purchaser on the same line of railroad that the Grand Trunk has applied for the authority to build a railroad to Boston and Worcester.

Coast to Coast in Four Days.

At the same time the Grand Trunk is seeking the traffic from the large manufacturing cities of New England to the British Columbian towns that are springing up as fast as the rails of the Grand Trunk Pacific are laid. President Hays wishes to reach all the manufacturing centres of New England.

The building of the proposed Southern New England from Boston, upon the completion of the Grand Trunk-Pacific Railway, will mean the possibility of trains being operated from Boston to Prince Rupert, the Pacific terminus, in a running time of within four days.

The Grand Trunk-Pacific is being built with an average grade as low as four-tenths of 1 per cent. The grade through the Canadian Rockies is no less and not greater the plains, which will give to the Grand Trunk Pacific a train capacity of 50 per cent tonnage than that of any other transcontinental road.

When the proposed railroads are completed a trip from New England to Europe can be made by the International Limited between Montreal and Quebec will cut the distance between Boston and Prince Rupert, which is now 3,400 miles, and connect to of the heaviest rails that are now rolled and there is not a wooden bridge on the road.

The Grand Trunk in extending its line to Boston has looked with favor upon the port of Boston and the mill men of New England. Officials of others thinks that a great deal of business for the new railroad across the continent may be developed in the territory to be tapped by the Southern New England road.

The Grand Trunk has to make traffic for its transcontinental road and New England is considered to be an inviting field.

To Remove All Obstacles.

The House Committee on Rules, to whom the question of the Grand Trunk Railroad System to enter Boston was referred, will file its report with the Legislature to-morrow.

This is done in order to remove all obstacles from the path of the petition, and in order to expedite its passage. The Committee on Rules has always voted to suspend the rules of the House so that the petition could be admitted for consideration by this year's Legislature.

A hearing will be given to-morrow to Judge Keneleck of Palmer which will give him an opportunity to explain why the Grand Trunk failed to advertise its petition, as provided by law, before its presentation to the Legislature.

The Committee on Rules was ready to file its report in the House to-day afternoon, but the committee discovered that if this were done it would not be complying with the law, which is that a railroad intending to petition for an extension of its corporate powers must advertise for three consecutive weeks before presenting its petition to the Legislature.

For good and sufficient reason, just as has happened in similar cases, the Grand Trunk failed to advertise its petition. This will be satisfactorily explained by Judge Keneleck at the hearing to-morrow.

Unless the bill of the Grand Trunk provides that, in such a contingency, the Committee on Rules shall report conveying on the petition unless the committee is furnished with satisfactory evidence that the petitioners have previously given notice by public advertisements of other equivalent to that required by law.

For this reason members of the committee, who are all enthusiastically in favor of the Grand Trunk's petition, admit that if they reported favorably, objections might be made by putting the matter through without any explanation having been obtained from the petitioners of their failure to advertise.

Edward J. Brandon of Cambridge, who served in his twenty-fifth anniversary as city clerk to-day, was pleasantly surprised by his clerks on his arrival at his office in the City Hall. The office was decorated with bunting, and over Mr. Brandon's desk as an arch of electric lights, while many bunches of flowers rested on the desk. Assistant City Clerk Thomas J. Conrich presented Mr. Brandon with a gold seal ring and a bouquet of Killarney roses, the gift of his clerks. Many prominent citizens of the University City will honor Mr. Brandon at a banquet in Young's Hotel this evening.

NEW ENGLAND OPINIONS OF THE RICHESON CASE

No other murder case in New England ever drew forth such widespread comment as that of Clarence V. T. Richeson, who poisoned Avis Linnell and confessed his crime a week before his trial was to start.

Neither was there ever a case in which there was such unanimity as to the punishment that should be meted out to the young man who once pretended to be a minister of the Gospel. Editors of newspapers and writers of letters declare that Governor Foss and the Executive Council should keep their hands off the case and allow the law to take its grim, death course. Some of the editorials and letters follow:

Lynn Item.

President Hoy of the Newton Baptist Theological institution addressed the students on Thursday, making his first reference to the Richeson case. It was a calm and just review of the situation, and he gave to the students words of counsel that were wise and timely. "Every class or profession," he said, "has its central virtue. A woman who is uncandid, a man who lies, a trustee who is treacherous, is not in the ranks of decent people. There is a point of honor in every situation that holds every true man. This principle applies to ministers of religion."

Newburyport News.

If Richeson ever sees the newspapers now, he must have a high opinion of himself. The popular passion, which sometimes demands that clemency be shown a man, seems absent from the death penalty shall come, and come speedily, to this cool-blooded murderer.

Hartford Sunday Post.

There has been no more astonishing thing in recent times than the unanimity of expression in demanding that the death penalty be carried out in the case of Clarence Richeson, confessed murderer of Avis Linnell. People usually averse to capital punishment, many of them known through their lives for their opposition to it, inflicting, have voiced their desire that this man shall not escape the full penalty demanded in such cases by the State of Massachusetts.

His crime in itself was so revolting from every viewpoint, from the very cunning and villainy in which it was planned and executed even to the last detail in his efforts to drag the poor victim's name through the mire by making his crime another's, that all sense of sympathy is lost. It is one of those rare cases in which the crime stands forth as so deliberate, heinous and cowardly, and the sentence so just and appropriate to interfere seems a pollution of the law.

New Haven Union.

The case of Rev. C. V. T. Richeson of Boston who has confessed the murder of Miss Avis Linnell, suggests nothing in the way of palliation or excuse. No convenient ancestor with a record for homicide appears upon whom some taint of blood can be placed.

The worst of this black-hearted act is the reproach it casts over the brotherhood who have many their lives to helping people out of the pit. The world has enough skepticism and wrong proves gobbling about the character of his dark-coated associates. As a whole, the clergy is made up of men who have turned their backs on dollars and on vices because it gives them satisfaction to set crooked things straight.

New Haven Union.

Juries to-day if they are at all, usually do so on the ground of insanity in such cases. The courts often temper justice with mercy. Sometimes, but not often, guilty men escape the full penalty of their crimes. The innocent seldom suffer. Every safeguard of reasonable doubt is thrown about them for their protection.

Of course, it is reassuring when these murder cases end with a confession of guilt, whether the confession is made before, during or after the trial. Richeson did the only decent thing left for him to do when he made a full admission of his murder of Avis Linnell. But that is no reason why he should not pay the full penalty of his crime, and we trust no cheap, mockish sympathy will be showered upon him.

Oxford Citizen, Bethel, Me.

Richeson has confessed the crime charged against him, has been sentenced to death in the electric chair on the week beginning May 20, and only that event remains to end the last chapter in one of the most awful murder cases in the history of crime.

Despite the confession, lacking in most murder cases, there is still a depth of mystery concerning the case; first, that it is hard to feel that there can be lodged in any human heart such fiendish motives as to prompt such a crime, much less in a person of Richeson's refinement and culture, and second, it is hard to see how a real rational mind could lead a man of his apparent keenness to such crude and ill advised proceedings as some of its have been, and we have a feeling that there is a weakness behind the prompting of the man's actions that given time will reveal itself more fully.

Richeson Is Not Insane.

Editor AMERICAN:

Could it be possible that the Council and the Governor of our dear State would interfere and save the life of such a blackened case as Richeson? Surely not.

Such a crime has never been. So revolting. The whole country is clamoring for his life and he should be put to death as quickly as possible. The excitement is very bad for our young men and women. No clean-minded man or woman could wish for less than Richeson's life.

Not Justice, But Vengeance.

Editor AMERICAN:

We should rejoice in this enlightened age to know that we have a Governor who is broad-minded in his views concerning capital punishment and one who is willing that we should take a step nearer to civilization and not follow the customs of the dark ages.

We must admit that the crime committed by Richeson is one of the worst crimes on record, but what right has society to put him to death?

It is natural to see the opinions of some who claim they are intelligent crying out like a pack of hungry wolves for the blood of Richeson; not crying for justice, but for vengeance.

However, I hope the Governor and Council will commute Richeson's sentence to life imprisonment and save the State from a second crime.

Ministers' Strange Views.

Editor AMERICAN:

After reading the letters in the AMERICAN by a "Jury of Ministers" on the Richeson case, I was a little surprised at them advocating the death penalty. For ministers of the Gospel of Jesus Christ to advocate killing a man for wrong-doing does not look like forgiving. How can we be forgiven if we do not forgive? "Peace on earth; good will toward men." Let us try and practice what we preach. By our words we condemn ourselves. I do not believe in capital punishment.

NEW AIRSHIP IS FOOL-PROOF

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—The Wright brothers have made the aeroplane fool proof. The device by means of which an aviator can fly without operating himself in the least about turning a somersault in his aeroplane, has been practically perfected and demonstrated at Dayton.

A. L. Welch, one of the pioneer Wright flyers, announced exclusively to the AMERICAN to-day, that he had flown a craft equipped with the device recently for over half an hour in a stiff wind with complete success. It was practically in order to perfect this automatic stability device that the Wrights conducted their experiments at Kitty Hawk, N. C., last Fall. The successful completion of the device is a result that has been sought by experimenters in every part of the world ever since the Wrights brought out the aeroplane.

It means that any man can step in a flying machine and pilot it through the air with as much ease as he can pilot a motor boat.

The device is so small that it scarcely can be detected even by those who are familiar with aeroplanes. It consists of a small steel bar weighing less than four ounces, which hangs as a pendulum from an arm, which projects from under the operator's seat.

This pendulum is set so delicately that it responds to the slightest deviation of the aeroplane from the horizontal. Instantly, if the craft is thrown from its balance only the fraction of a degree, a movement of the pendulum causes two small valves to open, which make possible the release of a minute tank of compressed air or the compression of the engine forces a piston back and forth, which communicates with the warping levers and distorts the wings of the aeroplane so as to throw the craft back to a horizontal position.

The device causes the levers to do what has hitherto been done by the hand of the operator.

DO YOU SWEAR WHEN YOU LOSE A COLLAR BUTTON? There is no call for that sort of thing. Have an "efficient" bedroom. Professor Berhard, writing in the Sunday AMERICAN, tells how every young man may have an efficient bed room.

WELCOME NEW YORK CARDINAL

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—New York today gave a magnificent greeting to Cardinal Farley upon his return from Rome. From the time that the steamer Berlin, bearing the cardinal and his suite, left Quarantine, where it arrived at 11:30 o'clock last night, until the vessel reached the dock of the North German Lloyd line in Hoboken at 10 a. m., a continuous ovation marked the course of the vessel. Immediately upon its arrival at Hoboken the reception committee boarded the Berlin from the steamer Rosedale.

Cardinal Farley was in the best of health and spirits and showed his joy at getting back to his diocese. The new cardinal wore a small scarlet skull cap and other portions of his attire bore the colors of the cardinalate.

The greeting between the prelate and members of his church was most affectionate. The members of the reception committee and others who greeted Cardinal Farley were the cardinal's colors. The Berlin was gorgeously decorated with purple and papal flags.

"I am glad to be home and with my people once more," was the cardinal's simple return in the welcoming speech of the reception committee.

Cardinal in Fine Health.

The Cardinal looked to be in perfect health and he said he felt fine. His complexion was ruddy from the sea air and his grip as he shook hands was firm. "I walked on the deck almost every day," he said, "save weather at times was so severe that the deck chairs had to be lashed.

At an opportune moment the Cardinal took occasion to pay a high tribute to Captain Hartnowitz.

"In paying a tribute to you," he said, "it is a tribute of one pilot to another. The pilot of the good ship Peter the fisherman, which has successfully navigated the globe for 2,000 years, and will continue probably to do so until the end of time, extends greetings to the pilot of this ship."

said Pope Pius gave him a message to the American people. America, the Pope said, is a hospitable land where all can share in a well-ordered liberty.

At the conclusion of the welcoming ceremonies on board the Berlin, the reception committee and guests, together with Cardinal Farley, gathered at the tables in the main saloon where luncheon was served, beginning at 1 o'clock.

Cheered by Vast Crowd.

At the conclusion of the luncheon Cardinal Farley boarded the Rosedale for the short journey to the Battery, the starting point of his triumphal progress through the streets to St. Patrick's Cathedral, where 90,000 children were assembled long before noon to greet the prince of the church.

On the Rosedale the Cardinal was again surrounded by the newspapermen and asked about the condition of the Pope. He said: "I was surprised over his being so well. It was astonishing. He was at all the consistories. At one of these, he spoke for more than an hour, when he might have delegated some of the work to the secretary. That shows that he has a lot of reserve vitality."

The appearance of the Cardinal on deck was the signal for a prolonged cheer from the crowds on the pier.

Women, children and men pushed forward to congratulate him and to kiss his ring. The Cardinal blessed all who could get near him.

Many requested and obtained blessings for sick relatives.

"Long Live the Cardinal."

Exactly on schedule the cardinal stepped ashore at the Battery at 12:30 o'clock. There was a vast throng waiting and the cheers as the cardinal, unassisted, walked down the gangplank were loud and long.

Cries of "Long live the Cardinal!" rent the air. It was only with difficulty that a path was cleared through the flower-bedecked arbor to the cardinal's waiting victoria, drawn by four white horses.

CUTS HIS THROAT; LIES ON RAILROAD

August Holsen, who lives at the Scandinavian Home on Webster street, East Boston, attempted suicide by cutting his throat with a razor early today, and then, to make certain of ending his life, lay down across the tracks of the Boston & Maine railroad, off Breman street, East Boston. There he was found unconscious with a razor by his side. He was taken to the East Boston Relief Hospital. Physicians at the hospital hold out no hope for his recovery.

NEVER SUSPECTED KIDNEY TROUBLE—GAINED FIFTY POUNDS IN WEIGHT

Some time ago I was suffering from what I supposed was rheumatism. I became so bad that I could hardly get on my feet from a sitting position. I ran down in weight from 195 to 145 pounds. I tried different kinds of medicine but received little or no help. I saw Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root highly recommended for kidney trouble but I never had any idea that my kidneys were affected. I thought I would try a fifty-cent bottle of Swamp-Root and see what the effect would be. I commenced taking it according to directions and in a few days I saw that it was helping me. I used the fifty-cent bottle and then bought three more dollar bottles and they completely cured me. I have gone back to my original weight—195 pounds—and I am a thorough advocate of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, as I believe it to be a remarkable preparation for what it is recommended to do.

WILLIAM H. PARTCH,

GIVES HUSBAND TO FIRST WIFE

A story of a second wife voluntarily surrendering her husband to the first wife when she learned she was divorced by the ruling is back of a petition filed with the Superior Court by Gustav E. Larsen of this city for annulment of his second marriage.

Larsen plans, upon annulment of his second marriage, to re-marry his first wife. This solution of a distressing marital tangle was suggested by Mrs. Larsen No. 2.

Larsen's petition reads:

The Petition.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.
Superior Court Divorce Session.
Suffolk, ss:
Gustav E. Larsen
vs.
Olava Herdahl.

To the Honorable, the Justices of the Superior Court, to be holden at Boston within and for the County of Suffolk:

Respectfully libels and represents Gustav E. Larsen of Boston in said county that he was on the form of libel but not in legal effect, married to Olava Herdahl, who calls herself Olava Larsen of said Boston, at Boston in the County of Suffolk and the Commonwealth on the 19th day of October, A. D. 1907, and that since after they lived together as husband and wife in said Boston until October 27th, A. D. 1911.

That your libellant contracted said marriage in good faith and with the full belief that he had a legal right to marry the libellee. No children have been born of said marriage.

Your libellant further libels and represents that prior to said marriage to said Olava Herdahl, to wit, in the year A. D. 1895, in Christiania, Norway, he was married to one Anshi Anderson, and two children were born of said first marriage, one of whom is now living, a boy, sixteen years of age.

Your libellant further libels and represents that at the time of this marriage to Olava Herdahl he believed that his legal wife, with whom he contracted a marriage in Christiana, Norway, in A. D. 1895, was dead, as he had not heard from her for a period of more than eight years.

Your libellant further libels and represents that his legal wife is now in Norway, in A. D. 1911, and that after they lived together as husband and wife in said Boston until October 27th, A. D. 1911.

Wherefore your libellant prays that said pretended marriage to said libellee, Olava Herdahl, be decreed null and void. GUSTAV E. LARSEN.

Dated at Boston, Massachusetts, October 21st, 1911.

At a hearing before Judge White this first Mrs. Larsen, through an interpreter, told her story. She said she wished to return to her husband. Judge White has taken the matter under advisement.

Larsen and his first wife lived together happily four years in Norway. Two children were born. Then Mrs. Larsen left home. The husband searched eight years for her without success. At the end of that time, believing his first wife dead, Larsen married Olava Herdahl, also a native of Norway. They came to this country and established a home here.

Recently the first Mrs. Larsen appeared, seeking her husband. She was, so far as all three could determine, the legal wife of Larsen, for Olava Herdahl, in compliance with the law, the second Mrs. Larsen suggested that the marriage be annulled and that Larsen re-marry and return to his first wife. This sacrifice has been accepted as the most feasible method out of the difficulty.

BENT CHARGES STIR SOCIETY

Boston society, particularly the Commonwealth avenue neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. S. Arthur Bent, are stirred by the financial suit brought by Mr. Bent against his wife, in which he seeks to recover $100,000 worth of stocks and securities.

Mr. Bent alleges that he was forced to give this property to his wife under a threat made by her to have him secretly committed to an asylum, and that she locked him in a room and otherwise so alarmed and frightened him that he had to hide from her.

He complains that the transfer, made under duress, deprived him of his fortune and left him without means of support at the age of seventy.

His attorneys, Williams & Copeland, No. 30 Congress street, have procured a temporary injunction for him in the equity session of the Superior Court, restraining his wife from transferring or in any way disposing of the property, pending a hearing next Tuesday.

Threat to Send Him to Asylum.

In his bill in equity, Bent claims he owned stock and securities worth $310,000 in June, 1907, that on June 15 of that year he and his wife and two children sailed for Europe; that shortly after they reached the other side Mrs. Bent charged him with having paid too much attention to a woman passenger on the way over.

He alleges that his wife accused him of paying this woman money, and promising her more; that although he knew these charges to be false, his wife forced him to transfer his fortune to her name, with a threat that if he didn't she would have him committed to an asylum.

While the suit is of a financial nature it reveals an unusual domestic tangle resulting from a romantic marriage twenty years ago. Mr. Bent is twenty-five years older than his wife, Mrs. Bent is a stately blonde and a deciple of fashion. Although forty-five, friends say she looks much younger, and that her beauty is still of the type to attract attention.

School Teacher Bride.

Mrs. Bent's maiden name was Mary E. Thompson. She was a pretty country school teacher when Mr. Bent made her his bride. Mr. Bent was superintendent of schools in Clinton at the time. He went to the town in 1883 and remained there until 1887.

He had the distinction of being the first school superintendent ever appointed in Clinton. Although much older, his attentions to Miss Thompson were marked. It is said in Clinton that Miss Thompson came there from Nashua, N. H.

The courtship lasted after Mr. Bent left Clinton. They were secretly married August 20, 1890. Mr. Bent was forty-nine then and Miss Thompson twenty-five. Later they lived in Boston at the Vendome and Brunswick and summered on Cape Cod, and at Magnolia where they had a cottage.

There are two children— Mildred, aged seventeen, and Arthur aged fourteen. Both are now attending a private school in New York State. The boy is said to be like his father down on the farm. Mrs. Bent is reported to be in New York.

Separated Since June.

Attorney Williams, counsel for Mr. Bent, declined to discuss the case, but remarked that the Bents were living apart and that he would like very much to locate Mrs. Bent. It is said that process-servers have hunted for her far and near without success.

The separation came last June when they closed their home at No. 84 Commonwealth avenue. Mr. Bent leased the whole house while Mrs. Bent lived between Berkeley and Clarendon streets. The place is now vacant, with shutters on doors and windows.

In June, Mrs. Bent and her daughter went abroad and the son remained with Mr. Bent. On October 9 Mrs. Bent and her daughter returned from Europe refreshed after a Summer on the continent and with a number of new gowns. They put up at the Vendome.

A few days later Mr. Bent was amazed to encounter his wife on the street. He hadn't been in her company.

Quarrel at Hotel.

There was a scene. Mr. Bent also engaged apartments at the Vendome on October 16 and remained there two days. Mrs. Bent and her daughter left October 20, and are thought to have gone to New York. That is the last time Mrs. Bent has been seen in Boston so far as could be learned.

At that time Mr. Bent had a dispute with some of the hotel attaches over his mail, which he complained had been tampered with by his wife without his consent. Hotel gossip is to the effect that the differences between Mr. and Mrs. Bent were a matter of public knowledge in the hostelry, and that during previous stays there evidences of frictions and threats had cropped out.

Persons intimate with the family say that Mr. and Mrs. Bent did not get along well for some years and that they quarrelled frequently.

ELIZABETH COLT BRIDE TO-DAY OF ANDREW ANTHONY

MISS ELIZABETH COLT.

Mrs. Anthony is the daughter of Judge Colt of Providence, and is a popular and prominent club member.

Most important among the society weddings of mid-January was that to-day at Andrew Weeks Anthony, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Reed Anthony of Commonwealth avenue to Miss Elizabeth L. Colt, daughter of Judge and Mrs. LeBaron Colt of Providence.

The ceremony took place in St. Stephen's Church, Providence, this afternoon, and was attended by the fashionable set of Boston and New York, as well as of Providence. The Rt. Rev. James De Wolf Perry, Jr., Bishop of Rhode Island, Rev. George Locke, D. D., and Rev. Dr. Fiske performed the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, Judge Colt, and had her sister, Miss Beatrice Colt, as maid of honor.

The list of bridesmaids attending her included Miss Ruth Anthony, sister of the bridegroom, Miss Katherine McCarley of Ridgeway, Pa., Miss Virginia Sheppey and Miss Gladys Baker of Providence, both members of the Agawam Hunt Club, as is the bride.

Most of the ushers were Harvard men and the majority of them classmates of the groom. They were Augustus P. Loring, Jr., who married Miss Bowditch in June; Morton Prince and Robert Fisher of Boston; Edward Martin Gould and Russell C. Colt of Providence, the latter a cousin of the bride; Otis Prescott of Newton, Howard Kent Sturgis of New Haven and Joseph A. Locke of Portland, Me.

Miss Washburn Weeks, a cousin of the bridegroom, whose wedding to Miss Frost takes place on the twentieth, was the best man.

A large reception followed the ceremony at the Colt home on Waterman street. Upon returning from their honeymoon trip the young couple will reside in Longwood.

A Marvelous Recovery

Milton, Mass., Man Permanently Cured of Terrible Kidney Trouble

C. H. Foster, 180 Thacher St., Milton, Mass., says: "I ran down so rapidly that I became dizzy and pale as death. A urinary trouble annoyed me constantly. I had a sharp, shooting pains in various parts of my body and I grew tired and languid. I had the kidney secretions examined by a physician, who said I was in bad shape and advised a change of climate. At that time the urine was very dark and unnatural. I used half a dozen boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The backache left, appetite improved, weight picked up 20 pounds and I felt well and strong. The trouble never returned."

Remember the name—Doan's. For sale by all dealers. 50 cents a box.

CARDINAL SAILS FOR HOME TODAY

Cardinal O'Connell and his suite sail from Naples today for Boston aboard the steamship Canopic of the White Star Line. Unless delayed by severe weather, she should reach Boston Monday morning, January 29.

The steamer left Genoa on Monday for Naples, where most of the passengers will embark. The only other stop will be Ponta Delgada, Azores, where she will call for more passengers.

It has been reported several times that because of the assassination's strike the sailing of the Canopic might be canceled or the steamer diverted to New York.

John H. Thomas, manager of the White Star Line, had no intention of interfering in any way with the plans for the Cardinal's return home and the reception. No trouble is anticipated in handling the Canopic when she reaches here, even if the strike is not settled in the meantime. The alumni of Boston College last night sent the following message to the Cardinal:

"To Cardinal W. H. O'Connell on board the Canopic, Naples, Italy—Your fellow alumni gathered in Boston College to celebrate the annual home night send you their cordial assurance of high respect and affection. May God be with you until we meet again.

MAY NAME THORNDIKE.

The name of Augustus L. Thorndike of Brewster is to be sent to the Council today by Governor Foss as State Bank Commissioner, it is reported.

Prominent Doctor's Best Prescription Easily Mixed at Home.

"From your druggist get one ounce of Toris compound (in original sealed package) and one ounce of syrup of Sarsaparilla compound. This is said to be the quickest and best remedy known to the medical profession for rheumatism and backache. Good results come after the first dose. If your druggist does not have Toris compound in stock he will get it for you in a few hours from his wholesale house. Don't be influenced to take a patent medicine instead of this. Insist on having the genuine Toris compound in the original one ounce, sealed, yellow package. Hundreds of the worst cases were cured here by this prescription last Winter.

ENCYCLOPEDIA IN STAR ROLE

THE ESSENTIAL ENCYCLOPEDIA
A Domestic Drama in One Act.
TIME—Any Hill Evening.
SCENE—Any Old Home.

Rising curtain discloses family group around the center table.

Pa—Mother, where's that new encyclopedia?

Ma—I can't find it. I was looking for it this afternoon to find out what the Seven Years War was.

Sister Hazel—I know where it is. Bob had it.

Bob—No, I didn't. I wanted it to take to school and couldn't find it.

Pa, to eldest son—Edward, have you seen the new encyclopedia?

Ed—Yes, I got it down to High School. I need it right along.

Pa, to Ma—Say! Do you think I saved up seven coupons and paid ninety-five cents for that "revelo" for you to lug it off to school? You bring it home to-night!

Ed—Why, what am I going to do. I got to have one.

Ma—There, there, Edward, do as your father says. Bring home the book and get another for yourself. I'll cut out the coupons for you every day, and you have enough money to pay for it. You can afford to pay ninety-five cents for the book. Besides, we need two copies in the family. When you are through school you'll never use it, and can give your copy to Robert.

Curtain, leaving family at peace. And it all goes to show that the Modern Universal Encyclopedia, one of the best reference books in the latest and best upon offer in AMERICAN history, is a real necessary proposition. No home is complete without one, more than one if there are children in school.

I must have YOUR Help to raise that $600,000

I NEED the help of every reader of the AMERICAN. I deserve it. Nothing more to merit it than any retailer of clothing in Boston ever did, or probably ever will do. I am voluntarily taking the most frightful losses I ever took in my 23 years of business career, because I must raise $600,000 through my five stores before the expiration of 30 days. Here in Boston I have thrown open my entire stock of more than 7,000 garments absolutely without reserve. So you wonder the sale is smashing all records, when GEORGES Custom MODEL CLOTHES which should never be confused or compared with readymades are now selling at these slashing reductions:

In case the ice on the Charles River Basin is not in good shape for the Carnival next Saturday afternoon the Carnival will be postponed to the following Monday, January 22, when it will be held in the Boston Arena on St Botolph street. The indoor track surface of which is eight laps to the mile at any time, no matter what the weather.

But it is expected that the river ice will be in splendid condition for an outdoor carnival next Saturday, barring heavy snow or a sudden thaw. The Carnival Racing Committee, which is co-operating with the AMERICAN in staging the big Ice Carnival, has the ice planers at work, eliminating the slight roughness which now impairs the surface.

The commission, as the controlling body of the river basin, will have charge of part of the Carnival course next Saturday, just as it has charge of the course for the AMERICAN'S swimming and motor boat events last August.

Carnival Free to All.

Now that contestants and Carnival officials will be allowed on the ice during the Carnival hours, spectators will view the races and other events from the outside. Inclement which affords a splendid sight from which thousands will not be interrupted view. If all the spectators were allowed to crowd on the ice only those in front could see anything of the Carnival sports.

The Carnival will begin at 2 o'clock sharp next Saturday afternoon. If postponed to Monday, January 22, in the event of Aloha on account of bad weather or bad ice, it will begin at 2 o'clock just the same. Of course if the Carnival is postponed and takes place in the evening the session will be free but the same as to the ice. Entries for the AMERICAN Ice Carnival free to all even to contestants. The latter do not have to pay an entry fee.

The race track on the river ice for the Carnival will be marked off between Gloucester and Fairfield streets, east of Harvard bridge, and will measure a full nine Beckley street, west of the Boston end.

The hockey rink will be parallel to the race track, and will measure 200 feet by 100 feet. The skating rink will be just east of the hockey rink.

The Carnival Program.

Inquiry has been made of the Carnival Editor whether a man or boy may enter all races. He may if registered. That is a registered skater may be entered in championship and open-for-all events. An unregistered skater is restricted to the open-for-all events. In no case are entry fees required. Any interested in the open championship events must be registered with the New England Skating Association, Arthur L. Johnson, secretary, No. 160 Summer street, Boston. Registration is not required for the three open-for-all events. The all contestants in all events must file entries with the Carnival Editor of the AMERICAN. Entry blanks are printed in to-day's AMERICAN.

The Carnival program will include among other features:

Championship races for men—quarter-mile dash; two-mile race; five-mile race.

Open-for-all events—Half-mile race for boys, eighteen or under; quarter-mile race for boys, twelve or under; half-mile race for girls.

Hockey match.

Curling match.

Exhibition by Merritt of St. John, N. B., professional world's champion, exhibition race against time.

Gordon Thompson of Spring Hill, N. S., amateur champion, to challenge any New England skater for a skating match or a fencing match or both.

"Bob" Warner of No. 184 Cabot street, the former New England and world's fancy skating champion, writes the Carnival Editor his enthusiastic praise of the Carnival project. His letter reads:

Champion Warner's Letter.

Carnival Editor, Boston AMERICAN:

I was very pleased to read that the AMERICAN is endeavoring to bring about a revival of speed skating in New England. The value of outdoor skating as a health-giving exercise cannot be overestimated, and those instrumental in promoting its interests should be considered public benefactors. In this the AMERICAN once again shows that it is the "live wire" paper, and that its policy is "the greatest good for the greatest number."

I have been connected with skating in Boston for over a quarter of a century, having won the New England championship for the first time in 1880, holding this title up to the year 1895, since when I retired on account of efforts brought about by my many business. I have had charge of that exclusive organization, the original Back Bay Skating Club, from its beginning in 1887 until its discontinuance in 1910. While at present I am not physically capable of taking an active part in this much needed boom for skating, I would be glad to boost it along to the best of my ability.

I feel sure that the AMERICAN Carnival will be a great success, and the speed skating enthusiasts have been waiting for an opportunity to show their ability. Trusting the weather man will be with us I remain,

Very truly yours,
BOB WARNER

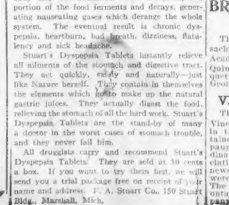
You Don't Need a New Stomach

You Can Now Look Any Meal-Square in the Face, and Then Just "Go For It," If You Take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Trial Package Sent Free to Prove It.

The stomach will go on patiently for years enduring abuse, overwork and general ill-treatment. So we're apt to think it can stand anything. But when the stomach does rebel, look out!



"Every Meal Smiles at Me Now Since I've Been Taking Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets."

The minute the stomach ceases to perform its functions properly the whole body begins to suffer. The food is only half-digested, the body only half-nourished. And the undigested portion of the food ferments and decays, generating nauseating gases which derange the whole system. The eventual result is chronic dyspepsia, heartburn, bad breath, dizziness, flatulency and sick headache.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets instantly relieve all sickness of the stomach and digestive tract. They act quickly, safely and naturally—just like Nature herself. They contain in themselves the elements which help make up the natural gastric juices. They actually digest the food, relieving the stomach of all the hard work. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the standby of many a doctor in the worst cases of stomach trouble, and they never fail him.

All druggists carry and recommend Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. They are sold at 50 cents a box. If you want to try them first, we will send you a trial package free on receipt of your name and address. F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

WEATHER FAVORS SHOW OF AUTOS

By J. C. KERRISON.

Had the exhibitors at both the combination show at the Palace and the Commercial show at the Garden planned the weather they could not possibly have secured any conditions so favorable to the demonstration of their motor vehicles as that which now prevails.

The New York roadways and streets are in a most deplorable condition, and horseless vehicles have the utmost difficulty in making any sort of progress. Taste efficiency has been materially affected.

Not so, however, with the motor truck, which is ploughing over the roads carrying heavy loads with comparative ease. The Alco and Decatur trucks, which for over a week have been on particular test, show no ill effects from the present winter conditions.

It is surprising how much interest is being taken in the truck shows, and especially so in that section devoted to the gasoline car. Speaking of electrics brings to mind the fact that in both the pleasure and commercial vehicle branches the electric is coming to the front, and the disadvantages of the early days are being overcome by the inventive wits which in modern designs are being used in service of wide scope.

The weak points have been eliminated and the vehicle, as a whole, has been strengthened, while batteries have been greatly improved.

The most important exhibit in the Peerless space is a truck chassis displayed in such a way that the machine may be thoroughly examined.

The Peerless trucks are made in three-ton, four-ton and five-ton models, each in two lengths of wheel base.

They are adaptable to all kinds of hauling. The motor is especially designed for truck service; it is located under the hood in front of the dash, where it is easily accessible for inspection or adjustment.

The crank case is in two parts; all bearings except the one in the upper half of lower half serves as an oil receptable, and can be easily removed for inspection or adjustment of bearings.

The crank shaft is of forged steel and of large diameter. Crank shaft, connecting rod and wrist pin bearings are liberally proportioned to insure long life. The carburetor is of Peerless design and of float feed, of the water jacket, automatic type.

In the Pierce Arrow five-ton truck the motor is of the four-cylinder type, the cylinders being cast in pairs. The bore is 4½ inches and the stroke 6 inches, the motor having a rating of 38 horsepower.

Main bearings are used for the crankshaft, three in all, and these are lubricated directly from an oil reservoir over the motor.

The location of this reservoir over the exhaust side of the motor insures the oil being kept in a fluid condition, even in the coldest weather.

Leads from this reservoir go to each crankshaft bearing, and to the timing gears. The crankshaft is hollow, and through its channels the oil then goes to the lower connecting rod bearings and wrist pins, from there to the cam shaft, that reaches to every working part of the motor.

One of the commercial vehicles which has proved a favorite of the White type is the five ton motor omnibus, which is exhibited at the show. This company is also showing a large, heavy duty chassis and its one-and-one-half-ton chassis. The White five-ton truck is widely distributed throughout the country.

The Alco exhibit consists of an improved type of coal dumping body on a five-ton chassis, a two-ton model with body for ice delivery and the three-and-a-half-ton chassis. The body of the coal truck is built entirely of metal. The load is dependent by the force of gravity, a chute and a sliding door being provided at the right side of the truck.

Among the novelties at the show is the Marsh tractor, one of the features of the Knox Automobile Company's exhibit. While this is the first time the device has been placed on exhibition, it has been on the roads through New England for the last four months, undergoing the tests.

The tractor is the invention of Charles H. Martin, one of the best designers in this country to develop a tractor than motor haulage problems.

It is a device that may be attached to the front axle of any horse-drawn wagon, the combination thus formed making a five-wheel, motor-driven vehicle, which takes up less room than the wagon with horses hitched to it. The Knox Company also shows a two-ton chassis and a six-ton chassis.

To-day almost every fire chief in the country and the fire authorities of every municipality and town are giving serious consideration to the use of motor fire wagons, either as an auxiliary to their present equipment or to replace horse-drawn apparatus. Hundreds of fire departments already have one or more pieces of motor apparatus in satisfactory service.

500 WOMEN RUSH TO SEE MAETERLINCK

Five hundred women went to Hotel Vendome yesterday afternoon to see and hear Mme. Maeterlinck, who was a special guest of the Boston Browning Club at its centennial celebration of Robert Browning's birth. After she arrived at the hotel, accompanied by Mrs. Henry Russell, wife of the director of the Boston opera, and Dr. R. K. Smith, chairman of the executive committee of the club, the lady become so great that it was found necessary to move into a larger room.

CLARE MEN ILSTALL OFFICERS TO-NIGHT

Doctor's Best Formula
Breaks Severest Cold in a Day and Cures Any Curable Cough.

This has been published here for several winters and has proven the quickest and most reliable formula obtainable for coughs and colds. "From your druggist get two ounces of Glycerine and half an ounce Concentrated Pine compound. Take these two ingredients home and put them into a half pint of good whiskey. Shake it well and take one to two teaspoonfuls after each meal and at bedtime. Smaller doses to children according to age. Be sure to get only the genuine Glyco-Concentrated Pine. Each half ounce bottle comes in a sealed tin screw-top case. Any druggist has it on hand or will quickly get it from his wholesale house. Don't experiment with preparations because of cheapness. It doesn't pay to fool with a bad cold.

ASKS STATE AID FOR SHIP LINES

General Hugh Bancroft, chairman of the Directors of the Port of Boston, told the New England men from this mouth that if the State would guarantee some of the securities of steamship companies when are needed to develop the port of Boston, then limitless Massachusetts capital would invest in these steamship enterprises. General Bancroft argued that the State would, in all human probability, never be put to a cent's cost, and that there is plenty of precedent for such course.

The shoe trade assembled at the annual meeting of the New England Shoe and Leather Association at the association headquarters, No. 101 Kilby street, President Charles C. Hoyt was in the chair, and he called the meeting to order at 12 o'clock there was a large attendance representative of the shoe and leather industry of the East.

General Bancroft, speaking on "The Port of Boston and Its Relations to Our New England Shoe and Leather Industry," said in part:

"It has been frequently asserted and rather generally accepted that because the centre of population has moved westward New England is no longer developing as superiority over Boston because of location, which is never to overcome.

"The truth is that Boston's location is unchanged in this respect and is unchanging, either for manufacturing or distribution. The advantage of the location can only be fully secured by the development of the port.

"Boston's location for the development of the world trade is superb. It is nearer to any port in the United States to all of Europe, all of Africa and the western coast of Asia, and it is the nearest import for trading with either side of South America.

"Boston is nearer the Pacific coast of South America than any Pacific coast port of the United States. It is nearer the important ports on the Atlantic coast of South America than any port in the United States.

"Keep these figures in mind:

Distance from Panama Canal to

Ports	Boston's advantage in miles.
Boston	2,607
Philadelphia	3,215	608 miles
New York	3,240	633 miles
Vancouver	4,009	1,402

"Do you not see what it means? That Boston is 858 miles nearer the Pacific coast of South America than any of our principal ports in the United States. Now look at these facts.

Distance from Rio de Janeiro to		Boston's advantage in miles.
Boston	4746 miles
New York	4778 miles	30 miles
Philadelphia	5,211	465 miles
Baltimore	5,240 miles	494 miles
New Orleans	5228 miles	480 miles
Galveston	5,511 miles	765 miles

"But it is chiefly of the coastwise trade that I wish to speak to-day.

"If Boston has good steamship connections with every important port in the United States, Southern ports and New England would literally have the middle states at their mercy. You could get your goods to a large majority of the people of the United States far cheaper than any inland city. The desirability of such comprehensive coastwise connections is well recognized, and there is every reason to believe that under improved trade conditions there will be a great demand for their support.

"Manufacturers are easily the richest State in the Union in proportion to population, and capital seeks investment accordingly. There is at least half a billion dollars of Massachusetts capital seeking investment every year. The owners of that money would be glad to invest it for the building up of the port of Boston and of the industries of the State and New England if a proposition could be made to secure a settlement of such lines on a business basis.

"Boston does not simply demand such support if they are to give suitable service and meet all forms of competition, and they will have to meet bitter competition both by land and water."

BUSINESS MEN PRAISE REVIVAL

In the Park Street Church and at the assembly luncheon of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, leaders of the Men and Religion Forward Movement outlined the effort of the movement on practical men of affairs.

At the Chamber of Commerce assembly Fred B. Smith, national leader; Charles Stelzle, local leader, and Graham Taylor, social service expert, made addresses.

Franklin W. Ganse of the Chamber committee said:

"The Men and Religion Forward Movement is a sane, substantial and practical movement. It is being backed by such men as J. P. Morgan and Cyrus McCormick. It was planned on an unprecedented scale and the members of the Chamber want to hear more about it. It is exceptional in its methods and accomplishments."

At Park Street Church.

The program at the Park Street Church opened with devotional services. Fred B. Smith presided at the session. Graham Taylor spoke on the "Spiritual Value of the Social Emphasis." He was followed by W. E. Biederwolf and John M. Moore.

A number of students from the Theological schools in and around Boston, including the Newton Theological Seminary, were in attendance.

In opening President Smith stated that yesterday's meetings were the greatest in years.

W. E. Biederwolf, the first speaker, declared that individual effort of workers is far more effective than the usual evangelistic campaign. He opened his address with a plea for more optimism. He said:

Individual Evangelism.

"The thing to do is to get individual evangelism. In 'The Master's Men' we are told about a little church which is the 'Church of the Best Licks.' There were only two members of the church, but they got right down on their knees and promised to put in their best licks for God.

"Public evangelism is a great thing. There has been lots of criticism and a good deal of it is deserved. There are more curious vagaries to-day, more isms, more perverted forms of religious people than ever before."

MAYOR TO PROBE FIRE ESCAPES

Mayor Fitzgerald will have an investigation made of the Revere House fire. He has received a number of complaints that the fire escapes in the light well at the Revere House did not reach the ground within thirty feet.

The Mayor has directed Fire Commissioner Daly to investigate the whole matter.

The hotel building was equipped with but two fire escapes, neither of which extended below the third story. This made it necessary for guests coming down the fire escape to the third floor to wait for assistance from the firemen, who came to their rescue with ladders.

The only available exit for the frightened guests was to enter the building again through the small "exit" sign. The escape down the two flights of stairs to the main entrance.

One of the fire escapes was located on the alleyway in the rear of the building. The other fire escape was the open space separating the main building and the wings.

There were three basement exits, and three exits on the main floor. It is claimed that none of these exits was marked with the usual red "exit" sign.

Firemen who reached the alleyway at Bowdoin street first declared they found the fire escape crowded with screaming guests, while others were climbing down ladders to safety. The prompt arrival of Ladder 1 from Pinckney street probably saved a number of these women from serious injury.

Building wreckers will begin to-day to search the ruins of the hotel for the bodies of Susan Dwight and Annie McDevitt, who were employed in the laundry that was located in the basement. They were fire destroyed the hotel.

An inquest into the fire opened at the State House to-day. Among those summoned were David Furman, the clerk on duty when the fire started, and D. C. Rhodes, another clerk, who flashed the alarm at midnight. The inquest is said not to have been ordered by the committee about fire escapes, but to be in accordance with the custom after large fires.

It is said that the hotel will be rebuilt is undecided, according to R. Stanley Harrison, the lessee. A meeting of the Fifty Associates, owners of the building, will be held to-day to settle the question as soon as they can be called together. George C. Parker, chief trustee, took steps toward that end soon after he had learned of the fire.

The two women who are believed dead in the ruins occupied rooms on the upper floor of the Bulfinch street side of the building. It was in this section that the fire raged fiercest.

JOAN OF ARC OF MILL STRIKERS

By GERTRUDE L. MARVIN.

LAWRENCE, Jan. 17.—Marie Dien is her name.

She is the Polish strikers' Joan of Arc.

Dressed in sober black, with a bow of flaming crimson at her neck, she exhorts and encourages and leads her people, shrieking "serh" at the strike-breakers, thrusting herself between her men and the bayonets of the militia, springing to her feet at the evening meetings for an outburst of passionate appeal—she is no mere stranger of the day—she is already the spirit incarnate of revolt.

There was a big strike among the Poles and Lithuanians in Chelsea. That lasted for six weeks. Joseph Ettor was there. He is a powerful speaker and a clever one. He told his audiences of 1,000 Poles and Lithuanians packed into two small rooms—all standing—so that there was not room to sit down if they would be interpreted by Polish, Lithuanian and Russian speakers.

Marie Dien Leads Cheering.

Marie Dien sat on a little black piano stool, up against the wall on the edge of the platform.

She could not understand all he said, for he spoke in English. But she never took her eyes from his face, and whenever he threw back his head in uncontrollable outbursts of gesture, her face, heavy and sullen, lined in repose, lit up in answering enthusiasm, and she led the clapping and cheering.

Then finally she slipped down from the platform, a couple of the narrow black recipit books under her arm. In through the crowd she went, up to groups and individuals, moving swiftly and quietly back and forth through the crowd, talking to men and one other girl, Annie Gadus, assisting her.

It was an orderly crowd, and it was a fine looking crowd. There were no rosy cheeks on men or women, boys or girls. The pallor of the mills hung over all. But there were clear eyes and sturdy bodies and an atmosphere of great alertness, active, self-respect. Standing on the platform looking out over the close packed heads, it was a motley setting. Rough black heads, curly brown hair, derbies and caps of the men were sprinkled in sheer relief and full among the feathers and bright blue and green and red velvets and glittering baubles of the women's hats. There were, perhaps, ten old women wearing shawls over their heads, but the rest of that crowd were men and women in their prime, comfortably dressed, quiet and controlled in their bearing.

Mill Workers in Meeting.

Looking at them close to, the high cheek bones, broad nostrils and flimsy material of their clothing betrayed the fluid race. But squinting up one's eyes as a concentrated wonder and judges a painting, the crowd might have been any well-to-do American audience gathered in Faneuil Hall to protest against the high cost of living.

"Mr. Ettor had been lecturing in Hampden, which tells the events of the last three days.

"Then this morning the Governor's secretary came down to find out what all this row was about. Well, he met me as I was walking along in front of the Wood mill, and we walked along together for a couple of hours. Well, he found out what all this row was about. He went back and told the Governor.

"And now the secretary of the Board of Arbitration is going to make a new offer.

"But—fellow workers! Attention! We are not going to walk into any trap.

"No arbitration can be satisfactory to men, women and children denied all that makes life happy and worth living. We are not going to allow an arbitration board to cheat us out of our rights.

"I hope that we shall allow no arbitration scheme to kill our enthusiasm.

"I hope that no false promises are going to lead you to quit the struggle before you know what you want.

"Oh you Lithuanians—you Russians—you Polaks! Just remember the old days, when they came to you in Austria, and in Galicia and said: Come—come to America—where there is lots of money, and you can work in a textile mill and be free and rich and happy. Beg money, borrow money—sell all that you have—leave your wife—leave your children—leave everything and come to America to work in a textile mill and be free and rich and happy.

"And they brought you here, where—" Ettor stopped abruptly, ending the sentence in a dramatic shrug of his shoulders, while a murmur rose all over the room.

POCO BENNETT IS CRITICISED

Harvey W. Pratt, counsel for George Pendleton Bowler, bookmaker convicted of "Poco" Bennett, the Harvard money lender, against whom Bowler has brought suit for $25,000, based on notes totaling $7,000. The case was heard in the Superior Court.

Pratt in his argument to the jury stated that Bennett only thinks of the money he can get by preying on Harvard students.

"This man," said Pratt, "all these years has preyed on young men who are seeking an education at Harvard. I pity ten young men who put himself in the clutches of a money lender who charges interest of 18, 25 and even 30 per cent. for the sum loaned and who does nothing for the community in which he lives. You must be severe with this man who thinks nothing of money."

The transactions for which Bowler is suing the money lender took place in 1909, while Bowler was a student at Harvard.

FIRE IN JAMAICA PLAIN HOSPITAL

Fire practically destroyed the main building of the Maternity Hospital of the New England Moral Reform Society at No. 215 Forest Hills street, Jamaica Plain, early to-day. The hospital buildings have just been completed and were not occupied.

The blaze was discovered by Patrolmen James Cullen and Edwin Blake of the Jamaica Plain station. While standing at the corner of Williams and Washington streets, they saw flames breaking through the windows of the building. Running toward the buildings, they were joined by Patrolman Dominick Stellmann of the same station, and all three rushed into the main building to warn possible occupants.

In the meantime the blaze was seen by Miss Catherine Lencon, a maid in the house at No. 225 Forest Hills street, who telephoned to the Jamaica Plain police station.

Chemical 15, of Walk Hill street, was sent to the scene. It arrived to find flames bursting from all the windows in the front of the building. When Acting Deputy Chief Kennedy arrived he ordered a second alarm to be sounded, as the fire had gained such headway that he feared losing the other two buildings in the hospital group.

The firemen fought the blaze from ladders on the roof of the operating building directly adjoining in the rear.

It is estimated that the damage will amount to $25,000.

The fire was spectacular. The hospital is situated at the top of rising ground, and the flames and smoke which burst from the windows could be seen for miles around.

The firemen had a hard time getting their apparatus to the scene of the fire, and several times the men had to lift it by hand and put their shoulders to the wheel.

Fire Commissioner Charles P. Daly was early on the scene and Chief Kenney is directing the work of the firemen.

The hospital is composed of three buildings of concrete, directly on the site of the old Fisher estate. Extensive alterations to the three buildings were being made. Those on the main building, which is in the form of the letter "L," have been completed. The fire was confined to this building.

Of the other two buildings one is one story high of the other two.

The cost of the group was $60,000. The cause of the fire is unknown.

LOSS OF $1,250,000 IN NEW YORK FIRE

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—The seven-story warehouse of the Terminal Storage Company, occupying a full city block near the North River waterfront, between Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth streets, and containing merchandise valued at more than $10,000,000, was damaged by fire to-day to the extent of $1,250,000.

SAVE CHILDREN IN CHELSEA FIRE

Six persons narrowly escaped death when a fire was discovered in the basement of a two-and-a-half-story wooden building at No. 202 Spruce street, Chelsea, early to-day.

William Downey, who occupies a second floor, was aroused from his bed at about 4:30 by the smell of smoke, and discovered a brisk blaze in the front room of his apartment. He awakened his wife and each of them grabbed two children and carried them to the street in safety.

By the time the firemen arrived the front room was all ablaze and the apartment was filled with smoke.

The damage is estimated at $1,000.

About an hour after the fire was thought to have been extinguished it was discovered that the blaze had rekindled. The fire department was summoned again and the second blaze extinguished with little difficulty.

LAWRENCE STRIKERS APPEAL TO THE WORLD FOR JUSTICE

The Lawrence textile strikers today issued this circular:

The striking workers, who have suffered untold exploitation and outrages, have reached the limit of human endurance. We submit to the world our grievances and reason for revolt. Our wages have been gradually reduced, and the machines have been speeded up so that to keep pace with them we have to strain to the limit of our endurance.

Taking advantage of the law passed to shorten the cruelly long working day for women and children, the mill owners reduced our wages an average of 5 per cent. Our enemies are trying to blind the real issues by calling us foreigners and dividers.

We reply that we were not called foreigners so long as we meekly consented to be robbed of our labor and opportunities. We were considered good citizens then, so long as we were traitors to our own best interests.

There is no name too harsh for our exploiters and their kept men to anathematize us with.

We are opposed to rioting, and equally opposed to it even though it hides its brutalities under the cloak of law and order, and armed with bayonets.

Mark! because the workers have dared to assert their rights and deny the right of strikebreakers to make possible the starving into submission and the defeat of thousands of men, women and children, the bayonets of militiamen are glistening in the streets of Lawrence.

Those reasons and others too numerous to mention are sufficient, we believe, to entitle us to the support of all fellow workers and friends.

We urge and plead with all who wish our cause well, to themselves, by word and deed, give us their help.

Workers! Remember! An injury to one is an injury to all! Strike all together! Stick together! All to victory!

ISSUE CIRCULAR APPEALING TO WORKERS TO HELP WIN VICTORY.

urged not to go to work. Things were getting pretty lively then and the militia swooped down on them and forced them to move.

Efforts from various directions were made today to get the two contending factions together today for the purpose of settling the strike. Dudley M. Hobson, a lawyer, representing Governor Foss, accompanied by F. S. Curtis, a Boston banker; Max Mitchell, president of the Federation of Jewish Societies; and Dr. L. Verner Briggs, drove through the city today, looked over the situation and then conferred as to the best way to proceed in the task of settling the trouble.

At the point of the bayonet two other bands of strikers were dispersed in the mills yesterday. The excitement was intense for a few minutes. It was feared that some of the men, grown desperate through lack of work in this bitter Winter weather, might fire on the soldiers; but the men, following the mere parole of their leaders' advice, did not openly resist.

A line of strike pickets was thrown around every mill in the city—not only the textile mills, but the Champlen and Merrimac Paper Mills and the Lawson Woolen Mills, recently opened.

The strikers adopted new tactics today. Instead of congregating as previously they had done, along the line of mills which guards the mill districts the pickets went into the section where the workmen live, and met them at their very doors, putting into their hands a circular issued today which denounces the mill owners and tells as every workman to join the movement.

The strikers today definitely declared their plan to close every mill in Lawrence, and the circular issued makes toward that end. It appeals especially to the English-speaking operatives, and follows a mass meeting at which 1,500 operatives were enrolled in the Industrial Workers of the World, at which Joseph J. Ettor is manager organizer.

The circular issued today reads in part as follows:

Strikers State Position.

The striking textile workers, who have suffered untold exploitation and outrages, have reached the limit of human endurance. We submit to the world our grievances and reason for revolt. Our wages have been gradually reduced, and the machines have been speeded up so that to keep pace with them we have to strain to the limit of our endurance.

Taking advantage of the law passed to shorten the cruelly long working day for women and children, the mill owners reduced our wages an average of 5 per cent. Our enemies are trying to blind the real issues by calling us foreigners and dividers.

Workers! Remember! An injury to one is an injury to all! Strike all together! Stick together! All to victory!

(Signed) THE STRIKE COMMITTEE.

A false alarm of fire was rung in from South Lawrence early today and sent a thrill of fear through those who heard it. Sharpshooters stationed in the towers of each mill were on guard all night. Searchlights played over the buildings, and the regular watchmen were armed with rifles.

Militiamen to Remain.

The city officials have decided to keep the State troops on duty here for an indefinite period.

While representatives of the city and State labored to bring about arbitration, both the mill owners and the striking men and women continued to maintain a defiant attitude.

Joseph J. Ettor, national organizer of the International Workers of the World, with which organization the strikers are affiliated, admitted today that many of the strikers favored violence.

"These people see the law only as an enemy to them in the strike," said Mr. Ettor. "The majority of the strikers, however, are violently opposed to violence of any kind. You see, one of the peculiar features of this strike is the inability of some of the strikers to speak English. They speak many different languages.

"We are doing our best to keep the men from violence. The leaders of the strikers are really the ones who have put a check to the violence—not the militia, police or firemen."

Mill agents reiterate today that they have nothing to arbitrate and therefore are not interested in arbitration committees. On the other hand, the strikers declared that they would not go back at the increase in wages, double pay for overtime and abolition of the premium system, and that nothing else would satisfy them.

Organizer Ettor said the big man back of the strike. If he told the men and women to return to work at once, they would do so. They do not question his commands.

Ettor Addresses Men.

Mr. Ettor made some surprising statements at a mass meeting of the strikers in the City Hall. His speech in English did not lack fire. He also gave a talk in Italian. He said in part:

"We are going to picket the mills. We are going to get our rights, and we will take no less than our demands. Mill agents are trying to convince you that you are getting more. You are not. Prove that to them. You want to insist that you are not beaten. Let them from the hilltops that you are not beaten."

A new feature of the strike system was inaugurated today when meetings for the various nationalities were held in various halls, and before the strikers have united in mass meetings. Because of the numerous languages spoken by the strikers, the leaders decided upon the separate meeting plan. At previous meetings it had been necessary to have several speakers address the meetings in different languages, including English, French, German, Polish and Lithuanian.

The Italian-speaking strikers held a meeting in Chabbis Hall, Oak street, at 9 a. m. today.

The French and English-speaking strikers held a meeting in Prince-Bebian Hall at 2 p. m. today. They will hold another meeting in the hall tonight at 8 p. m.

The German-speaking men and women met today in Central Hall. There was a big attendance. Several addressed the meeting.

Official headquarters for the strikers were opened today in Franco-Belgian Hall at 2 Mason street. The hall will be used as the meeting place of all of the local workers of the World committee here, including the general strike committee, during the remainder of the strike. Many of the big mass meetings will be held there.

PATHETIC SCENES WITNESSED AROUND MILL TENEMENTS

By REV. ALBERT E. GEORGE.

LAWRENCE, Jan. 17.—Because there was no unusual outbreak around the mills, the workers in many of the homes on Union and Elm streets asked me as I called upon them: "Has the strike ended?"

I told the interpreter who accompanied me to inform them there was no change.

Mrs. Arfu Bonocosa of No. 122½ Union street, mother of twelve children, threw up her hands and exclaimed, "It's too bad. I've such a large family to feed, and small wages. But it hard, but now it is harder than ever.

"Four of my children work, and they want so much to eat. Then there's the rent, $2.50, coming next Saturday. My husband has not worked in some time. He's not well, and what we are to do, I don't know."

Many a mother has had her anxious moments since the strike began. There will be suffering when prolonged and the small stores cannot afford to give much credit.

A poor mother told me on Common street that she could not get any coal any more on account of the credit that they would be forced to give.

Girl Explains Situation.

Many a home down by the Everett Mill has an anxious mother in it. Some take the situation calmly, and the men especially are determined not to submit to any reduction, but it would not take much to induce some of the young women who work in the spinning room to return.

They are already tired of staying at home, and no one cares to spend any money. One bright woman, Miss Sophia Lardeau, of No. 122 Union st., who works in the spinning room of the Wood Mill told me today that she was going to write to Mr. Wood herself.

She had already begun her letter in this wise: "We don't want to get lower wages. We working harder, but higher wages. We work harder than we did, so he have to put oil on our frame in the spinning room.

"All the time we have to work fast and now instead of getting $8.80 a week we get $8.10. Do you blame us for asking for that extra fifty cents?"

This young Italian woman has been eight years in this country. She claims that when they work fifty-four hours a week, they make more work faster.

To work so hard as these young women do makes constant complaining and it conferred with as many as six, among them a few being twisters who under the new schedule get $7.70 and they all claim that by working less hours a week they are forced to work just as hard and deserve a living wage.

No Food; No Work.

She declared "I can't live as my parents did. They had poor food before they came to this country and they had much of it and were well. Now they have food and clothing to wear.

"If we don't eat well, we can't work. Why now in the mills, they don't give you time to eat lunch. We work so hard that we must eat more than our parents. Our parents could stand it better, and we don't want to do what they did."

This is the situation with many of the young women who want to live differently than their parents.

All through this locality you will find rents where the households are large, as the mothers must bear the burden of the strike. The rent of the tenements—four rooms and kitchen—is $3.50 a week.

Take a man working in the spinning room of the Wood mill and at the best he can make $8 a week, and now reduced to $7.84 and even out of this comes wages. Several workers of the World committee here, including the general strike committee, during the remainder of the strike. Many of the big mass meetings will be held there.

You can rid yourself of cold in the head, sore throat, bronchitis, catarrh, leucorrhoea, foul breath, rheumatic pains, and that miserable feeling of approaching "grippe," by this simple formula. Mix the contents of a half-ounce vial of virgin oil of pine, with two ounces of glycerine and half a pint of Pure Rye whiskey. Take a teaspoonful every four hours.

Your trouble will be gone in less than a day and you will not need to stay in bed or discontinue your regular duties. Be careful to get the genuine virgin oil of pine, which always comes in sealed wooden cartons bearing the name of the Leach Chemical Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Many a home down by the Everett Mill has an anxious mother in it. Some take the situation calmly, and the men especially are determined not to submit to any reduction, but it would not take much to induce some of the young women who work in the spinning room to return.

They are already tired of staying at home, and no one cares to spend any money. One bright woman, Miss Sophia Lardeau, of No. 122 Union st., who works in the spinning room of the Wood Mill told me today that she was going to write to Mr. Wood herself.

She had already begun her letter in this wise: "We don't want to get lower wages. We working harder, but higher wages. We work harder than we did, so he have to put oil on our frame in the spinning room.

"All the time we have to work fast and now instead of getting $8.80 a week we get $8.10. Do you blame us for asking for that extra fifty cents?"

This young Italian woman has been eight years in this country. She claims that when they work fifty-four hours a week, they make more work faster.

To work so hard as these young women do makes constant complaining and it conferred with as many as six, among them a few being twisters who under the new schedule get $7.70 and they all claim that by working less hours a week they are forced to work just as hard and deserve a living wage.

No Food; No Work.

She declared "I can't live as my parents did. They had poor food before they came to this country and they had much of it and were well. Now they have food and clothing to wear.

"If we don't eat well, we can't work. Why now in the mills, they don't give you time to eat lunch. We work so hard that we must eat more than our parents. Our parents could stand it better, and we don't want to do what they did."

This is the situation with many of the young women who want to live differently than their parents.

All through this locality you will find rents where the households are large, as the mothers must bear the burden of the strike. The rent of the tenements—four rooms and kitchen—is $3.50 a week.

Old Clarke
It's Purity Comes From a Natural Source
WHAT MAKES GOOD WHISKEY?
¶ The only proper distillation for fine and high-grade whiskey is through the old-fashioned process, by the use of the mash tub and distillation through a three chambered still. This may be Greek to the average purchaser of whiskey, but it is true nevertheless.
¶ It is better to have this class of whiskey in your home than to have one made cheaply and sold chiefly on a local reputation.
¶ Clarke's Pure Rye and Old Clarke Bourbon are made precisely the old way, the only right way—through the mash tub and three chambered still. It has been distilled since 1856 and the formula is the same today as in that year. It is bottled in bond, 100 proof, guaranteed by the U. S. Government and is made in the largest whiskey distillery in the world. The demand for straight Pure Whiskey built this distillery.
¶ If you get Clarke's you get the best.

Bowlers Rush in Entries for Title Tournament

Bowlers from far and near are rushing their entries for the Boston AMERICAN'S Championship Bowling Contest, many having been received from Rhode Island, New Hampshire and the other New England States. This makes it certain that it is the biggest success ever held in the bowling field.

Bear in mind that the AMERICAN will give to the winner $100 in cash, or if an amateur the same sum invested in a trophy, and with the cash or trophy goes the title or champion candlepin bowler of New England.

Remember, too, that the $100 is not the only prize the AMERICAN intends to work for, but the AMERICAN will soon announce a large list of additional prizes for bowlers finishing close to the winner, but in no case can any bowler win but one prize.

The AMERICAN is giving this contest to decide the champion bowler of New England, and is giving it free-handed. No entrance fee is exacted from any bowling entry. This is true, too, regarding the alley owners. Bowling will pay the sum asked for bowling at the alleys they roll over—that is all. The AMERICAN won't take a cent from any alley, but requests everyone and managers to assist in seeing that the bowling is conducted strictly according to bowling rules. Read the rules carefully.

All sending in entries will receive in return mail a card, on which is shown his being eligible, and this card must be given to the alley owner or manager and before the bearer begins to roll his five strings, or the alley owner or manager will then, at the conclusion of the bowling, put the scores for each string and total of the five strings on the card, sign the same, and have two reputable citizens, who have seen the strings bowled, also their names.

Billy Perrin of the Elite Alleys told the Boston AMERICA'S Bowling Editor to-day that the contest was the most perfect to decide the champion bowler of any kind in New England that could be devised, and great credit was due the AMERICAN for promoting it. So far as he could determine about all the bowlers rolling in alleys were going to enter, and personally he intended to work overtime in making it a rich success.

Secretary C. H. Dolan of the City League expresses his view of the contest in the following letter:

Bowling Editor, Boston AMERICAN:

I have long considered it a poor idea of deciding the question of who is the champion bowler in either of New England, which is always been a question of climate was the same two-string bowlers in the series of the country. To my mind the only and best way to decide the question is the contest inaugurated by the AMERICAN, and you will be swamped at the number of entries received. The contest is much talked about and supported by the bowlers in the City League. Wishing you the success of the contest, I remain, yours for the best, rollers of the game.

C. H. DOLAN, Secretary City League.

Boston, Dec. 26.

Editor of Bowling Championship:

Dear Sir—I think your contest is the bowling championship and one of the best ever held in New England. Please send me a blank entry for number of strings you have to bowl at the alley I am now in, and where to send same when to start and where to finish. Kindly let me know as soon as possible as I am very anxious to enter.

EMILE LAVELLE, JR.

No. 20 Clark street, Somerville, Mass.

Bowl five consecutive strings. Entries close January 28. Preliminary or qualifying rounds begin next Monday night. All ties to be rolled will be given in the AMERICAN during the following week.

Bowling Editor, Boston AMERICAN:

Why not include Waltham in your bowling list of alleys for bowling? Waltham alleys are to rule. It is a great bowling city and we have a North Side team, a South Side team, continuous trade leagues in New England, and we have some of the best bowlers in the state and have an elaborate bowling alley with Billy Wallace's alleys. I send you a schedule of this season, and I should have a chance to qualify here in Waltham.

Respectfully,

H. M. P.

Waltham, Mass.

With the application from the owner of Billy's Alleys there is no doubt the bowling committee will act favorably in naming it for the use of Waltham and other bowlers in Boston. Its vicinity, and other towns and cities in New England, should make application to the Boston AMERICAN, stating their desire for qualifying alleys to be made official in bowling the preliminary or qualifying round.

Among the entries received are the following which will be given out as the entries will be published. Later in the week space will be devoted to giving a whole grist of names of those already in the contest.

"Tony" Gardella, Wonsocket, R. I., one of the crack bowlers in that section.

Walter R. Kirk, manager of the Morray & Irwin alleys, and always prominent in the sport. One of the best of Boston's pin breakers.

Al. Richardson, Pawtucket, R. I., whose reputation is well known in bowling circles in his city.

H. L. Wilson, Adams Square alleys, Providence, in the city bowling league.

W. H. Young, Danvers, Mass. A dangerous man in getting high scores.

Oliver Lavelle, No. 7 Temple Place, Boston.

Eddie Simons, No. 95 Salem street, Boston.

Now come on boys with your entries, fill out the blank printed in another column. The highest pinfall will win the first prize, five consecutive strings in two-string handicap qualifying round. Twenty strings in the final, ten strings rolled on consecutive nights.

Referees and other officials will be appointed for the elimination contests.

Players residing outside of Boston can bowl on alleys to be selected in the following cities and towns:

Maine—Portland and Bangor.

New Hampshire—Manchester, Dover and Nashua.

Vermont—Burlington, Barre and Brattleboro.

Massachusetts—Holyoke, North Adams, Springfield, Pittsfield, Worcester, Fitchburg, Lowell, Lawrence, Haverhill, Lynn, Gloucester, South Framingham, New Bedford, Brockton, Fall River, Taunton and Middleboro.

Rhode Island—Providence, Woonsocket and Pawtucket.

Connecticut—Hartford, Bridgeport, New Haven and New London.

The editor of the Bowling Contest reserves the right to make any rules or conditions which may hereafter become necessary for the proper conduct of the contest, and gives notice that his decision on any question pertaining to the contest will be final and absolute.

Watch the AMERICAN'S sporting pages for the entries and all the details of the Bowling Champion Contest. The facts and arrangements will be printed from day to day. If there is anything you want to be informed about, write to the Bowling Editor, Boston AMERICAN, Boston, Mass.

CARRUTH STARS TACKLE ELITE

Many of the followers of the City League are predicting defeat for Carruth to-night when it meets Elite at the latter's alleys. It sounds good, but Chester Carruth's boys take it as a joke and assures these fans that they will take the whole four points in a walkaway.

It is most probable that "Red Millar will get one into the lineup tonight. "Red," who is the popular idol of the Elite "fans," started the season in wonderful fashion and with his every going strides was always over the 100 mark. However, he has been finding the mix for hard breaks of late and his average has dropped considerably.

Another good match that is bound to attract many of the South End "fans" will be rolled at the Murray & Irwin alleys when Bill Beatty's Chancy team and Mish Murray's aggregation. Murray & Irwin should win at least three points and if Eddie Chancy shows better form than it has been displaying in the last few matches.

Murray & Irwin is not so far behind Carruth but not so far ahead of Boylston, so Walter Kirk's team will have to take all four points in a walkaway. Kirk's team is showing to-night. The men made a miserable showing in Waltham and were lucky to get away with three points.

Jack Sleeper's Boylston team can be counted upon to take a quarter of points from Eddie Macvarthy's gets to-night unless the latter team springs something new in the bowling circles or the Boylston team rolls in ruinous style.

Hayward ought to give Adams Square a pretty even match. Bob Hayward has been shown very poor form in the last few matches and will have to bowl a little better to get an even break with the Adams Square team.

INTERCOLONIALS OUT TO BEAT B. A. A. SEVEN

Ice hockey honors in Boston will be decided at the Boston Arena on Thursday evening when the B. A. A. team meets the Intercolonials. A few weeks ago they met for the first time in a game, after two twenty-minute periods, resulted in a tie at 3 to 3. At that time both teams refused to play off the tie. For this reason and the fact that much interest has been shown by followers in Boston and vicinity, their meeting Thursday evening is expected to prove a most popular attraction.

SOUTH BOSTON BOY TO MANAGE LYNN

Arthur "Terry" McGovern of South Boston has been appointed manager of the Lynn New England League team. McGovern has been playing in the New England League for the past several years, and last year played first base and captained the Lynn team. A few years ago he was given a tryout by the Red Sox, and played the utility role for one year, after which he signed with Providence. He is a good leader, and has been playing a fast game at the initial corner for Lynn.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Jan. 17—Zbyszko, the great Polish wrestler, defeated Herman Ordeman, champion champion, in a finish match. The contest was the first ever seen in Minneapolis. Zbyszko's wonderful improvement has gained him many friends, and he should secure another chance by Gotch for the world championship title.

ST. ANN'S COUNCIL WINS.

At the Powder House alleys, North Somerville, St. Ann's Council of St. John's the Baptist defeated Company E of Dorchester, Wheatley all four points. A. Mergan of St. Ann's team had the highest total for three strings. St. Ann's team is now leading the league, with Dorchester close second. Somerville and Melrose will roll at Melrose on January 23.

ST. JOSEPH FIVE IN BIG BATTLE

One of the largest gatherings that ever assembled to witness a basketball game in this city is expected to be present when the St. Joseph five of the West End and the Cathedral Y. M. C. A. of the South End meet at the Y. M. C. A. building on Berkeley street to-night. The teams are holders of the first and second positions in the Greater Boston Senior League.

The management of both teams are making as much room as possible to accommodate the large crowd. The game is sure to be one of the best of the season. Both quintets are confident of winning.

Since the defeat of the St. Joseph five week ago, double interest is centered in this league, and when the first and second teams meet it can readily be seen what an enthusiastic crowd will be on hand. Captain Grady is confident that his men will be able to "come back" to-night and retain first position.

The Cathedral men realize what to-night's game means to them and will make every basket count in their effort to defeat the West End boys. The South End team has lost but two games this season, while the St. Josephs have lost one, and the former team hopes to put itself on even terms with the latter by winning to-night's contest.

He had hoped to be able to train the twenty-two candidates for the relay race with Cornell, to be held in Boston, but is absolutely unable to do it.

B. A. A. Opens Big Amateur Boxing Tournament To-night

By JACK CONWAY.

The amateur boxers hereabouts are certainly getting their innings these days. The "simon purest" have had chances galore to show their prowess in the squared circle. The B. A. A. will open another amateur boxing tournament night with the trials. The finals will be held on Saturday night as usual.

Over forty entries have been received for the tourney and some rattling good bouts should be witnessed by the members of the Uniform organization. There will be bouts held in five classes. They are the 120, 125, 145, 158 and heavyweight classes.

The amateur boxers of New England are now beginning to show their true form. And it has all been brought about by plenty of competition.

The Armory A. A., which is now closed, the B. A. A., Bradford Boat Club, Riverside Boat Club, Quincy A. A., American Legion and Mechanics Club have staged some corking good shows this season.

The amateurs of this section of the country will had little previous experience in the manly art and were awfully crude. Soon very promising youngsters, however, have been brought to the front during the past six weeks and from present indications it looks as though the competition would be keen at the New England championships, which are scheduled to take place at Mechanics Building in the Spring. And all the best in the country will like to be represented by some real "live wires" at the rubbing championships which will take place in this city in the Spring.

Boston is the only one that claims the B. A. A. plans to hold five or six inter-city bouts during the season. These bouts between the best boys around Boston and the pick of the New York amateur mitt artists are attracting a great deal of attention.

Jack Reno is reported as being in excellent condition for his eight-round bout with Jerry Galter, which is booked for the American A. C. to-morrow night. Reno is the former amateur champion of the United States. As for Galter, I guess every kid in town knows who he is, and if he doesn't he should be placed on a bread and water diet. Eddie Keerin, manager and matchmaker of the West End Club, says that the police will probably not interfere with the bouts.

There should be plenty of action up at Manchester, N. H., to-night when Dan Gallagher gets on his bouts of New England battlers. George Perry meets Bob LeFavour in the main event of the evening. Perry will have a big advantage in weight. Perry is a white hope, but has experienced very little good fortune to date. Joe Cox is also a fight since he was victorious in Tom O'Rourke's "white hope" tournament over in New York last Summer. Joe is a big fellow and can give and take a lot of punishment. Mike Conley and Mark Chase are interesting for Willie Lewis in the second bout. Joe Eagan and Young Ahearn with Tommy Ahearn of Manchester in the semi-preliminary.

"Porky" Flynn, the West End heavyweight now in Australia, has had one of his fingers amputated. "Porky's" finger was injured when the gasoline tank of his automobile exploded last August while he was out motoring. The injured finger made it impossible for Flynn to fight in his true form. "Flynn is as good a white heavyweight as there is in the world," writes Joe Woodman from Australia. "His 'bum' finger has been a big handicap for him, and as there was danger of blood poisoning setting in I had it amputated."

Ad Wolgast is taking things easy at Venice. The lightweight champion is figuring on boxing at the end of six months. The Cadillac farmer isn't bothering a great deal about the lightweight elimination battles which are being planned by Coffroth. When Wolgast re-enters the ring he will meet the man who will draw the biggest house. In discussing the lightweight situation with a coast critic Ad said:

"There isn't a man in the bunch that can lick me. It is merely a question of how I can make the most money out of them. If Welsh shows well in his next fights, he and I ought to draw a big house, consequently I will favor Fred with the first real date I make."

Billy Gardner has arranged a good card for Lowell first "fans" for Friday night. Johnny Gallant of Chelsea and Ed Flynn will meet in the main bout of the evening and should furnish a fast and exciting battle. The semi-final bout will bring together Harold Edson of Weymouth and Young Buster of Pawtucket. Young Sandow of Chelsea and Young Bassett of Lowell will perform in the curtain raiser. Billy Gardner is doing more than his part in keeping the Spindle City on the fight path.

"Fighting" Terry Brooks has been matched by Kid Block to meet Freddie Duff at the Eighty-ninth Athlet'c Club, North Adamsa to-morrow night. Gilbert Gilbert was originally billed to meet "Fighting" Terry, but Joe Nelson's protest was forced to call off the match on account of an injured hand.

Boxing Results

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—In a whirlwind bout of ten rounds at the Royale A. C. of Brooklyn, Tommy Murphy of Flatbush outpointed Joe Bedell of Williamsburg by a small margin.

FALL RIVER, Jan. 17.—Ray Wood of this city and Kid Scaler of Los Angeles, Cal., went twelve rounds to a draw before the members of the Colonial A. C. in the semifinal. Hugo Kelly of Portland, Me., knocked out Kid Oscar in the fifth round. In the curtain-raiser Young Chick of this city defeated Young Borden in the third round.

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 17.—Young Erne of Philadelphia made a fight about even with Tommy Furey of Attleboro at the Rhode Island A. C. to-night, although not getting the decision. It was hard for the local boy to get the better of Erne, who beat over Mike Gibbons of St. Paul. In a fast eight-round bout Young Chicago Willetts of Fall River was given the decision over Young Miller of Pawtucket.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan.—Tom McMahon, the Pittsburg "bear cat," won the fight at the Olympic A. C., defeating Bill Hurley of Olean Falls. In the first round McMahon put Hurley down for the count of nine. The fight in the tenth round McMahon had the best of the encounter.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 17.—A slim house prevented the bout between Charlie Turner and Tommy Langlois here.

The Over-Chaperoned.

By DOROTHY DIX

AMERICAN mothers seem to be divided into two classes—one that never looks after its daughters at all or protects them, and the other that makes its daughters so closely that it makes them prisoners.

And between the two types of mothers it is hard to judge which is worse.

There are altogether too many mothers who seem to feel that they have as little responsibility toward their girls as the birds do toward the fledglings that they have pushed out of the nest. These mothers will let a little immature, ignorant girl go off with people they do not know, attend parties and go to places with young men whom they do not know by sight and come home at any hour that she pleases. Such mothers permit their daughters to receive men visitors of whom they know nothing, to carry on correspondence with strange men, and to visit other girls in distant cities of whose family, and habits and character they are totally ignorant.

Every day we see girls in queer places, doing queer things, that make us wonder if they have mothers, and, if so, what their mothers are doing that they are not keeping a better watch upon their daughters. For it is a mother's duty to keep her eye on her girl, and to safeguard her with a knowledge and experience that it is impossible that youth should have.

Chaperoning Overdone

On the other hand, there are also too many mothers who overdo chaperoning, and in their zeal to protect their daughters they stand such perpetual guard over the girls that the poor things are left out with gimlets doing sentry duty at the door.

And in this land of liberty, where the chaperon, at best, is an imported article that we have never taken kindly to, a mother can ruin her daughter's prospects just as effectually by overchaperoning her as she can by not chaperoning her at all.

Take this case, which is a real one, as an example. Among my acquaintances there is a certain girl, little known even of a girl, who is just as sound and whole some as a red-cheeked apple. She is merry and bright and attractive, and many men, who are enchanted with her when they first meet her, follow up the acquaintance by going to see her. But never but once do they call.

A Dead Race

The reason is the girl's mother. She sits in the parlor the entire time of the man's call, looking like a forbidding dragon. She takes no part in the conversation. She makes no effort to be agreeable or companionable. She just sits up in frozen silence, seeming to indicate to the poor, innocent young man that she suspects him of being a wolf in sheep's clothing, and that she is there to protect her ewe lamb from him.

The race of heroes is dead, and by consequence one such session as this chills the enthusiasm of any man and the result is that the little girl never sees him more. Nor is she invited to go to the theatre, since her mother has to be lugged along also, and the average modern young man has neither the inclination nor the money to pay for tickets and supper for a girl's maternal relative.

Now this mother thinks that she is doing her duty by chaperoning her daughter so assidnously, and she is so blinded by her own theory that she hasn't enough sense to see that she is driving away all be eligible men from the girl, and cutting her out of the natural pleasures of youth —selfes foredooming her to be an old maid.

For how is a man to summon up enough courage to make love to a girl in the presence of her mother, or to pop the question if mother never gives him a chance?

Cupid is a shy little fellow, and he needs encouraging. He takes to flight at the sight of mother's petticoat. Which, simply the fact that mother will do well to remember.

Likewise mothers will do well to reflect that the overly strict mother not only drives young men from the home, but daughter also. Many a girl gets to meeting men on the street because she cannot have them visit her in peace in her own home. Foreign girls are like canaries. They have been bred in cages so long that they probably don't mind it, but the American girl is born of the eagle, and if she doesn't get a certain amount of liberty she flies like eagle.

All this comes to saying that while a girl should be chaperoned she should be chaperoned in moderation. The matter must not be overdone. Every mother should make it her business to get acquainted with all of her daughter's friends, and especially with her own friends, and after having satisfied herself that the girl's men friends are clean and honest and honorable young fellows, then mother should give them a fair field.

Better Be a Chum

It isn't necessary to watch a girl as if she were a ticket-of-leave woman in order to keep up with her. In fact, the mother who makes herself a chum with her daughter, is much more able to know what she is doing than is the mother who requires her daughter to give a detailed account of everything she does and says. The mother who knows how to take care of her daughter without letting her feel the sphere of protection that is as tangible to the girl, and to all who come about her, as would be a coat of mail.

And, after all, the essence of all safety for a girl is the spirit the mother has implanted in the daughter's heart. If a girl has been taught to be modest, and to have high ideals and principles, she doesn't require any Argus-eyed duenna to watch her. She has that within herself that beats all the chaperons on earth, and that enables her to walk safely through any dangers and temptations.

Of course, I am not saying that mother should not be Sister Anne on the housetop so far as her girls are concerned. Far from it. I am only reminding mother that it is well to come down sometimes off the housetop, after she has gotten the lay of the land, and give the girls and their beaux a chance.

Try This Home-Made Cough Remedy

Costs Little, but Does the Work Quickly, or Money Refunded.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a pint bottle; then add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

You will find that this simple remedy takes hold of a cough more quickly than anything else you ever used. Usually ends a deep seated cough inside of 24 hours. Splendid, too, for whooping cough, croup, chest pains, bronchitis and other throat troubles. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

This recipe makes more and better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for $2.50. It keeps perfectly and tastes pleasantly.

Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and all the natural pine elements which are so healing to the membranes. Other expectorations will not work in this formula.

The plan of making cough syrup with Pinex and sugar syrup (or strained honey) has proven so popular throughout the United States and Canada that it is often imitated. But the old, successful formula has never been equaled.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Married Life the Third Year

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

No. 6—Helen Chaperones Alice Brooks at a Bachelor Apartment Dinner.

IT WAS with much reluctance that Helen had consented to chaperon Alice at this dinner in Dick Fairchild's apartment. And now as she hurried down to be ear in which they awaited her, she almost regretted that her "no" had not been more decisive.

Warren had been gone two days, and she had hardly been out of the house since he left. She knew the change and distraction would be good for her, yet she felt so little in the mood for anything of this kind.

"It was dear of you to come," said Alice, as Fairchild stepped out and helped Helen into the car. "We're so tired of dining around at restaurants and hotels. It's much nicer at his apartment, but since Mrs. Vinton went South there's no one to chaperon me."

Even in the quick drive there, Helen discovered that something was wrong—plainly they had been quarreling. Although they talked freely to her they had very little to say to each other. And there were traces of tears under Alice's veil.

She Is Beautiful

But she had never looked more beautiful, the white furs brought out all the delicate fairness of her face. And Fairchild in his evening clothes seemed more distinguished and taller than ever. His dark hair almost touching the top of the car.

When they reached the apartment the door was opened by a Japanese servant. The rooms were large and exquisitely furnished. Helen had never been here in a millionaire bachelor's apartment, and she was struck by the luxurious appointments. It was like a set of an elaborate stage setting of some society play.

The Japanese showed them into a dressing room where they laid aside their wraps. On a low tiled table were all the silver and cut glass articles that could be found in the daintiest woman's boudoir.

"Of course you saw something was wrong," murmured Alice as she fluffed up her hair before the mirror. "It's the same thing it always is! He says it's all my fault—that I'm insanely jealous. But how can I help it when he's lunching and dining with other women all the time?"

"But, Alice, you can't go on like this," looking at her friend's pale, tired face. "Can't you see you're much thinner—that all this is telling on you fearfully?"

"Oh, I don't know," recklessly. "I suppose when we are married he'll break my heart—if he doesn't do it before. But what can I do? I love him too much to give him up."

"Come, dear," urged Helen. "We mustn't stay here—he'll know we're talking about him."

Suspicions Aroused

They went back into the music room where he awaited them. The walls were lined with photographs of actresses with their heavily inked scrawled signatures. White bear skins covered the floor and a number of deer heads, trophies of his hunting trips, hung above.

As the Japanese came to the door to announce dinner, a telephone rang in the hall.

"Pardon me, I'll have to answer—this Jap can't talk over the phone."

"Some woman," whispered Alice. "I never come up here that half a dozen don't call him up."

"Yes, I know who it is," his voice was plainly strained. ..... "Why nothing ..... No one."

"She's asking him who's here," whispered Alice. "She knows some one's here by the way he answers."

"What do you expect me to say?..... No, I can't this evening.....I'll call you up in the morning.....Yes, good-bye."

"Who was that, Dick?" asked Alice, as he came back into the room.

"Why, dear, what a question to ask."

"Well, I've a right to ask it. I know it was a woman—but which one?"

"Now, Alice, don't begin that." Then turning to Helen: "She has some absurd idea that every time the phone rings it's a woman."

"It isn't an absurd idea—it's the truth," Here, to Helen's relief, the Japanese again announced dinner. The dining room was richly panelled in black oak and rose silver glistened on table and sideboard.

To Helen, who was used to much simpler service, and table appointments, it was full of interest. They had hardly finished the oysters when the phone rang again. Excusing himself, plainly disconcerted at the interruption, Fairchild left the table.

Alice shrugged her shoulders. "I said half a dozen, didn't I? Well, this is the second, so far."

"But, Alice, aren't you a little unreasonable? Just because the telephone rings it doesn't mean it's a woman."

"Just listen! Is that the way he'd talk to a man?"

"I'm sorry," came his voice from the hall. . . . . I sent the car at four o'clock. I thought, of course, he'd got here in time."

"Some woman borrowing his car," whispered Alice.

"Why, surely they don't do that," asked Helen in a shocked voice.

"They DON'T!" with a cynical laugh. "Don't!"

"Yes. I'll see that it gets there in time Thursday. . . . No, I can't now. . . . I'll talk that over when I see you. Good-bye."

He Appeals to Helen

When he came back to the table, Alice kept her eyes on the plate in a strained silence. Helen tried to keep up the conversation. But it was not a very happy dinner. As the salad was served the 'phone rang again.

"Let it ring," he said impatiently.

"But it may be some disappointed one of your lady friends?" asked Alice sarcastically.

He laid down his knife and fork with a hopeless gesture. "You see," turning to Helen, "she's absolutely obsessed on the subject. She's nagging me to desperation about it. If you could only make her see the unreasonableness of this jealousy."

"Unreasonableness?" asked Alice bitterly. "Is it unreasonable to be jealous when four or five women call you up every evening?"

The telephone was keeping up a shrill, persistent ringing.

"I'll have that phone cut off," angrily, as he threw down his napkin and left the table.

"I know you couldn't resist answering it," Alice called after him.

"Oh, Alice, don't—don't you see you are only aggravating him this way? It you won't give him up—you'll have to take him as he is. You can never make him over."

"Oh, I know—but I can't help it. You don't know what it is to be consumed with jealousy. Look, I haven't eaten a thing. I can never eat when I'm with him. There, listen!" as again came his voice from the hall.

"Alice, you MUSN'T listen! It isn't like you. And you shouldn't have asked him who it was that phoned. You mustn't let your jealousy drive you to such things. What will he think of you?"

"Pish!" with a contemptuous shrug. "oh, he'd listen any time. He hasn't any scruples about those things. But it was useless to ask him if it was—he wouldn't be told to me the truth. He never does."

"Well, Alice," as he again took his seat at the table. "This time it was an old friend of mine who wanted his place back. You don't believe me?" as Alice made a disbelieving motion with her hands. "How can I—when you'll lie to me so often?"

Fairchild turned to Helen: "There, you see a beginning. There's nothing I can do that'll satisfy her."

"Well, I'm afraid we're not making this a very pleasant dinner for Helen," Alice went back her plate with a bitter laugh. "If we intended to quarrel all the time, we might as well have gone to a restaurant."

Always the Same

Coffee was served in the library and the remainder of the evening was as strained and unsatisfactory as had been the dinner.

"It's always like this," murmured Alice as they put on their wraps while Fairchild ordered the car. "We have not had a happy evening together for months."

An hour later Helen was standing before the mirror in her own room, slowly brushing her hair for the night. She was living over every incident of the evening—the dinner and the drive home.

In a way she could understand Alice's love for that man. His charm and magnetism were undeniable. And yet his outrageous flirtations with other women! Were all society like that? she wondered. Were none of them content with the love of one woman?

She finished plaiting her hair, slipped into a warm dressing gown and then sat down to write Warren his nightly letter.

She told him every detail of the afternoon, and of how he had all made her realize more than ever how much his loyalty meant.

"Oh dear, I am so glad that I have never known jealousy. Whatever little misunderstandings we have had—that have been caused by mere trifles—you and I, straight from the heart to heart. And to-night I feel more than ever all that is sweetest, truest in life. I love you, dear—dearest! Good-night. HELEN."

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

Another List.

DAYSEY MAYME APPLETON has not been asked to state who, in her opinion, are the twenty greatest women in the world, but this little oversight makes no difference to Daysey Mayme. When a woman has a message to deliver to the world, she knows she must not sit down and wait till the world rings her door bell and begs for it.

"So far," said Daysey Mayme, with the thoughtful look she always records at least five minutes after spending an hour in a conference, "I've not yet seen a list of the twenty greatest women in the world that did not set my pulse to beating fast. The richness of the names already named but the list I would suggest represents a greater diversity of talent and includes the noble souls who have come to women in her hour of need.

"There are the Seven Sutherland Sisters, who discovered a relief measure that takes a Sis Hopkins braid at eight in the morning and develops it to Marguerite braid proportions by eight at night. Not a word about them!

"Venus, the only woman in the world who keeps her figure without a straight front corset, is next on my list.

"Then there is Job's wife. He had the boils and all the other plagues, and because he didn't complain on the street car nuisance he became a martyr to all the ages. Every wife knows that Job did his share of complaining at home. Job had the boils but Job's wife had more than the boils. SHE had to put up with the man who had them! In the name of all the wives in the world, I insist on a place in the list of the wife of Job.

"There is the first woman philosopher named in history—Little Eva. Always in frivolous attire, she was never perturbed. Her credo for the philosophic resignation with which she put through her duties and troubles relieved themselves. A weaker woman would have fretted and worried and scoured the hills and the highways and called public attention to the cruelty of her environment, but with her is that grand old woman who found the happiest lot and that self-effacing soul who made up her mind when she found would not do fat that she could eat no lean, and so there was no wrangling for the same dainty and the matter was secured between them.

"For one hundred and twenty years Noah's wife heard her husband grumble at the needless delay of the contractors, and their bills, and she didn't have the satisfaction he possessed of knowing that they were going to be drowned, but fame has passed her by. To hear a man grumble for one hundred and twenty years in building a home, and to have that home built and then become a martyr to the flood is homage to be paid to a heroic figure like the wife of Noah.

"The woman who invented skin lotions, face powder, the curling iron, wrinkle eradicator and all the like unknown!"

The enormity of the task of filling these unknown heroines to the ranks of fame made Daysey Mayme sigh.

Desperate Desmond

I HAVE THE MOVING PICTURE EVIDENCE TO CONVICT DESMOND!
DESMOND HAS MY ROSAMOND IN HIS POWER A NOBLE ITALIAN!
BESMIRCH YOUR NAME I HATE YOU! LOVE ONLY CLAUDE
ROSAMOND I'LL BUILD A HAT STAGE OVER YOU AND WHEN CLAUDE ARRIVES YOU'LL BE STABBED TO DEATH! MY PROUD SON!
NOW TO GET DOWN WAY FOR THE CAMELS AND SOON TO RESUME MY HUNT FOR A ROSAMOND. I WONDER IF SHE STILL LOVES ME?
I'LL FEED THE CAMELS AFTER I'LL TEST HER LOVE WITH THIS HAY STACK SHE LOVES ME SHE LOVES ME NOT
SHE LOVES ME SHE LOVES ME NOT - SHE WHAT'S THIS? MY ROSAMOND!
CLAUDE MY HERO I LOVE ONLY YOU!
ROSAMOND YOU ARE IN MY POWER ARMS AGAIN AND THE MOVING PICTURE MAN WILL CONVICT DESMOND
CLAUDE WE ARE SAFE NOW!
CURSES! PROUD ROSAMOND STILL LIVES! I MUST FOIL THAT BUNK HERO CLAUDE BEFORE THEY REACH TRIPOLI

Claude Eclaire, hero, rescued by the Italian soldiers, also heroes, gallops across the desert on a fast camel to rescue Rosamond from the clutches of the villain. Along with them goes the moving picture operator, who has taken some very interesting films, showing some of Desmond's deeds on the desert. The party is small, but each member is grimly determined to bring the international crook to justice.

Some distance away the crafty Desmond has a plan whereby his hated rival, Claude Eclaire, will be lured unwittingly to end the young life of his beloved Rosamond. The scoundrel is piling hay over the helpless girl, as he knows that Claude will stop to feed his camel when he reaches the spot. Desmond wants Claude, as he pitchforks the hay out of the pile, to stab the girl who is so dear to him.

Well has Desmond guessed that the bravest are the tenderest, even to camels, for the first thing Claude does on seeing the hay is to jump down and prepare to feed his mount. Pitchfork in hand, he advances upon the hay pile, little guessing it conceals the form of the beautiful Rosamond, who also is totally unaware of her lover's proximity.

Like many another man of action, Claude is at heart a bit sentimental. With no one in sight, he pauses at the hay-stack to try that old game—"she loves me not." Who does not remember the anxiety of pulling the petals off a daisy, especially when few petals were left and the count was close to the end? The world could not, the straws in a haystack—but what of it!

The touch of sentiment has saved Rosamond. With glad surprise Claude beholds the features of a sweetheart in the midst of the hay, and even more gladly does Rosamond realize that she is rescued and that her rescuer is Claude, her lover. What do they care for Desmond now, or for anyone else? The world contains only themselves.

Away over the desert go Claude and Rosamond, the italians and the movingpicture man. The lovers are happy again. Everybody is happy except Desmond, who gnashes his teeth as he sees that his villainous plan is again foiled. However, he resolves to keep up the chase, and the outcome will be told here tomorrow.

PART ONE—(Continued)

STAFFORD was to have gone with them, but reclphoned at the last minute that he would be unable to go. Jimmie and his wife and sister-in-law, all in splendid evening toilet, entered the Stafford limousine and were soon in the golden horseshoe at the opera house.

Jimmie sat in a front corner seat of the Stafford box, where he might be admired fully by the men and women of wealth and fashion.

The first outburst from the orchestra rather startled him, for the overture opened fortissimo with a half-score of French horns and trombones.

"Wow!" he whispered to Fanny. "Some band, that. Lew Dockstader's never had anything on that."

In vain, through the first act, did he sit, watch and listen. He could not get one single intelligible thing out of it all. To him it seemed that all the singers were either very sad or were shouting out threats to kill each other. Heads formed on his noble brow, that great dome of ideas that had yet to produce one with results.

Advantages for Child

The last act had Jimmie in throes of mental anguish. He was almost "crossing under the line" and without a solitary or even vague hint of comprehension as to what it all signified.

They returned to the Stafford home, and Fanny brought her baby to Virginia's boudoir.

Virginia, fondling the little one, gossiped with Fanny as to the advantages the child would have.

"She'll never have to fight and struggle as you and mother did," Virginia told her sister. "I'm going to buy all her clothes for her, see after getting her education and, when the time comes, she will go through Vassar. I am going to do everything for my little godchild, Virgie, that money and love can do."

The famous Potash and Perlmutter ("Abe" and "Mawruss") stories by Montague Glass are a regular feature of the Sunday AMERICAN

"You're a brick, Virgie!" cried Fanny, "but what will Robert say?"

"He will be delighted."

"He is such a noble fellow," said Fanny. "See all that he has done for Jimmie and me."

Virginia's maid, Josephine, entered to ask if madame desired anything done.

Virginia spoke with her in French.

Fanny sat brooding, her eyes filled with admiration for her accomplished sister. When Josephine left the door she proceeded to give a graphic imitation of the talk between mistress and maid.

Like a Story Book

When she ended Fanny, lapsing back into her old talk exclaimed: "Gee, Virgie! It's just like what you read in the story books. Why, the beautiful diamonds you're taking off and the beautiful French you talk!"

"I've studied hard enough," suggested Virginia.

"And your music."

"That, too."

"And your books on art and literature and your German, too," went on Fanny, and then, as she waved a hand about the room, "And this. Your gold toilet set, the cases for the jewels, private telephone in the house, the fine grounds, the country house, the box at the opera, the most beautiful gowns made, while two years and less ago you were only a telephone operator. It is wonderful. It makes Laura Jean Libbey look like a piker!"

"Oh, Fanny," protested Virginia.

"What!"

"Sling."

"Oh, I just have to blow off steam sometimes. And maybe I'm not in it, too, and me behind a millinery counter a little over a year. Gee, how the rich women would get me. Mrs. Cluddington would enter. She's fifty if a day and weighs 190 pounds. She, with her rippling curls, looks at a ball and would only a girl of sixteen. She tries it on and I say, 'Oh, Mrs. Cluddington, don't that lovely? She puts on the hat, leaves the store looking a perfect fright as I look over to Marie, and Marie looks over to me.

"Yes, and those girls try it on me, too, now," said Virginia.

"Yes. It's all different now," mused Fanny, plunging herself into a comfortable down-cushioned chair. "Here I am just back from the opera and sitting in the magnificent boudoir of my sister, Mrs. Robert Stafford. Sometimes I don't believe it's real, and I find myself getting ready just in time to wake up with the alarm clock and rush for the subway and the day's job."

"It is all real, Fanny and you—are you happy?"

A Cloud

"Am I happy? That is a funny question."

Virginia sighed.

"What do you mean?" demanded Fanny. "Aren't you happy with all this?"

"Yes; most of the time."

"If you're not all of the time I don't understand what you can want. Nobody could be a better husband than Robert. He is just the kindest, most generous man in the world. No woman could help loving him. You love him—do you not?"

"Yes," Virginia replied moodily. "Nearly all of the time, I might say."

"Come, Virginia, out with it," Fanny said sharply. "What is the trouble?"

Virginia hesitated for a long time, and finally, half hiding her face, said:

"When he's himself there is not a finer man in the world, but when he is not"—

"You mean he drinks hard?"

"Yes."

JIMMIE had just entered the boudoir to get Fanny when the house phone on Virginia's desk rang. She answered it. It was the voice of her husband she heard. He had just entered the house and wanted to know if she was awake.

Virginia was forewarned by Robert's voice.

Fanny started up.

"We had better be going off to our rooms," she said.

"Oh, just a moment," said Virginia anxiously. "You had better speak to Robert before you go. He will probably want to apologize for not going with us to the opera and will want to know how you enjoyed it."

"Does he treat you cruelly when he is drinking?" whispered Fanny.

"No; he is generally in the best of humor, dear," replied Virginia, "but you can't understand; don't ask me. He is a different man to me—a stranger, wild with passion. It is terrible. It is terrible!"

The Odor of Wine

Stafford tapped on the door of his wife's boudoir and entered in evening dress and carrying a cigar, which he held in his hand.

"Evening, everybody," he said. He was evidently in the best of humor, but there was fire in his eye as he glanced to Virginia, radiant in her most charming evening gown.

He went to her immediately and caught her about the waist.

"Hello, baby!" he said. "My, but you are so pretty to-night!"

He turned to Jimmie and Fanny.

"Do you blame me for loving her?" he asked.

"I should say not," replied Jimmie.

"She's the prettiest and sweetest girl that ever lived," added Stafford. His face was flushed and his breath coming fast and in short respirations. He leaned over his wife, clumsily trying to caress her.

"Kiss me, baby," he said.

Virginia drew back from him and from the odor of wine that clouded his every word.

"Please, Robert," she pleaded. "Please, Robert."

"Oh, go on; you know you love me," he said thickly.

To appease him for the moment Virginia kissed him.

"My, but good!" he said exultantly.

"Jimmie," he said, as he turned to the young man. "How much salary are you getting?"

"A hundred a week," replied Jimmie.

"No, you're not; you're getting a hundred and fifty."

"It's a hundred," repeated Jimmie.

"You're getting one hundred and fifty," repeated Stafford, "and when you're receiving twenty, I will pay you $200 a week."

"Twenty!" asked Jimmie in surprise.

"Yes," drawled Stafford with a laugh. "I have a system about you. I really pay you ten times more than you're worth, which you first came I thought you worth one and so I gave you fifty a week. When I thought you were worth ten, I gave you a hundred, and now that you're worth fifteen, I make it $150 a week."

Eluded Embrace

Stafford turned, half staggered to Virginia again and tried to force his drunken embrace upon her.

She eluded him and he turned to Fanny.

"How's the kid?" he asked.

"Very well, thank you!" replied Fanny.

"I saw her this morning and I thought she looked pale," he said, stumbling in his speech. "Now, it isn't right for little girls to look pale—shows they don't get enough fresh air. They need more sunshine. Now do you know what I am going to do, Fanny?"

"No, Robert."

"In the morning, I'm going to send you one of my cars as a present for her."

"Oh, Robert!" Fanny exclaimed in delight.

"That's the reason I just raised Jimmie's dough; to pay for the chauffeur and things. Then plenty of fresh air for the kid, see?

"You're too good, Robert," said Fanny.

"It's for the kid," he told her. "Very fond of the kid. Named her Virgie. How does the idea strike you, Jimmie?"

"What?" asked Jimmie.

"I've just made little Virgie a present of an auto."

"What make is it?" asked Jimmie.

"You're always there, Jimmie," laughed Stafford. "Honest, Jimmie, you always make me laugh. Don't change your disposition or I'll never forget you."

"I didn't know I was so funny," said Jimmie, stiffly.

"That's the beauty of the whole business," replied Stafford.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Up-to-Date Fable

A LION once invited a fox to visit him in his cave.

"I should be glad to call," said the fox, "but I have observed that all the tracks are pointed toward your door, and there are none leading away."

"Pooh!" said the lion. "That phenomenon may be attributed to the great esteem in which I am held by my guests. I trust you will see well that when they leave they walk backward for a long distance to show their respect for me. You will need a most delightful and distinguished company when you call."

"If you will give me the names and addresses of a few of the survivors," answered the fox, "I will call and see if their reports are satisfactory. If so, I will accept your invitation."

Moral: Avoid invitations to wedding anniversaries and whist parties.

Fine for Croup

Mothers Should Cut This Out and Never Be Unprepared.

In any home where a child has a tendency to croup, a bottle of HYOMEI (pronounced Hi-Go-Me) should be kept constantly on hand.

A sudden attack of croup with difficult breathing and extreme distress is apt to come on at any time.

The course to be pursued is plain. Send for your doctor at once, and in the meantime drop 30 drops of Hyomei into a bowl of boiling water, and hold the child's head over it, cover with a towel or cloth, so that only the air filled with Hyomei vapor is breathed.

This method of treatment has saved many a child's life, and mothers of croupy children should see to it that HYOMEI is always on hand. Full instructions for prompt relief of croup is in each package.

A 50 cent bottle of HYOMEI is all you need for croup. It is sold by druggists everywhere.

HYOMEI is made of Australian Eucalyptus and other antiseptics. It contains no cocaine or other harmful drug. Money returned if it does not give satisfaction in treatment of catarrh, coughs, colds, croup and catarrhal deafness. Complete outfit including inhaler $1.00.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS; LATEST FINANCIAL NEWS

WESTERN UNION STRONG TO-DAY

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—The telegraph stocks were the most prominent at the opening of the stock market to-day. American Telegraph & Telephone advancing 1¼ and Western Union gaining ½.

This strength was attributed to opposition expressed in Washington against Postmaster-General Hitchcock's suggestion that the government acquire the telegraph lines in this country.

The pace at the outset was steady, although trading was not vigorous. The coal stocks were active. Lehigh Valley, after losing half, advanced one point. Reading lost ¼ in the first few minutes, but later gained ¼. United States Steel common was up ⅛. Canadian Pacific lost ⅜, on profit-taking in London and the New York. Southern Pacific, Atchison, American Smelting and Southern Railway each gained ¼. Erie common and Amalgamated Copper were unchanged.

The curb was quiet.

Americans in London received quiet support.

STATE ST. NEWS AND COMMENT

Wall street traders are pleased with the demand for Rock Island and other bonds, and the market reflects more cheerfulness. But there is not much activity in securities and the trading continues too much professional to suit.

Arrangements for the sale of the Portland, Me., Street Railway Company, with assets of about $5,000,000, to the Portland Light and Power Company have been perfected. The street railway company is capitalized at $2,000,000 and an offer for a majority or all of the shares at $118 has been made. The directors voted to recommend selling at that rate.

Control of the Industrial Trust Company of Providence has been regained by Colonel Samuel P. Colt, president of the United States Rubber Company. His candidate for president, Colonel H. Martin Brown, defeated President Cyrus P. Brown, who sought re-election to an office he has held for three years. Colonel Colt will be chairman of the directors and assume his old place on the executive committee.

It is believed that about February 1 several new issues of securities will be announced. The way has been well paved for this new share activity by the banking settlement. It is not long since the bankers had to withhold what new securities could not be "digested" with the market in its present condition.

Senator Hoke Smith and Congressman Bartlett of Georgia propose to introduce a bill requiring the New York Cotton Exchange to deliver the same grade of cotton that is sold on future contracts. In case this would enable New England mills to know that they will get cotton of the class they contracted for.

The Conditions Under Which Women Work in Laundries

An Opportunity for Investigation Which the State and City Authorities Should Not Neglect.

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner

Women and girls employed by the public steam laundries in the city of Boston complain of the conditions under which they work, and are trying to better them by organizing.

It is an uphill fight in a city where there are tens of thousands of women driven by poverty to work at almost anything that may be offered.

The work requires skill in order to be well done. But at the expense of the public it may be badly done by unskilled workers. And in the city of Boston the number of unskilled workers, women with children to support, women with worthless husbands, women with husbands out of work, is very large EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

Whether the women will win in their effort to get better conditions no one can say. But the sympathy of the public is with them.

However the struggle between these hard-working women and their employers may end, the authorities should not neglect this opportunity to inform themselves as to the conditions in the public laundries.

In spite of the law which limits the working hours of women, the steam laundries often keep women at work from seven o'clock in the morning until late at night.

THE CHILDREN EMPLOYED AS "SORTERS" ALSO WORK THESE LONG HOURS WHEN BUSINESS DEMANDS IT.

The public and public officials are guilty as usual.

The owners of the public laundries are competing among themselves. The man that can hire a woman for the least possible money and get out of her the most possible work is the successful owner of a laundry.

The women are paid miserable wages, many of them working for as little as five dollars a week. Nobody needs to be told how hard the work is. Hundreds of young girls work all day, standing constantly in miserable quarters, the air filled with steam, and their hands plunged in water almost boiling hot.

It is only necessary to look at a group of these workers to understand what a brutal outrage it is that any woman should be submitted to such conditions and to such slavery.

There is no use in criticising or denouncing the employers. They are simply cogs in a machine, and they work as the machine works, getting all that they can for themselves and giving as little as they can to others.

The crime is with the public that demands the cheapest prices and asks no questions.

The crime is with public officials that neglect to supervise labor and enforce laws.

The trouble is with the system of competition unrestricted, the system that makes it possible, at times, to work a child from 7 o'clock in the morning until midnight.

The system notifies the woman who declares herself too tired to work longer that she may go home if she chooses, but she can't come back. The child is told the same.

Very often in big industries it is not possible even for the honest public official to get at the truth. Employes protect their employers, hide the facts that they may keep on working, that the routine may not be disturbed.

The great difficulty in regulating child labor is the dishonest attitude of parents forced upon them by poverty. They are poor, the younger children are hungry. They think that the older children must work. And they lie about the ages of the children and lie about the hours of work, and the atrocious system continues. They do not know that child labor helps to keep them poor.

At this moment, when it is possible to learn the truth, when the facts as to bad surroundings, small wages and other dreadful conditions can easily be ascertained, the factory inspectors, the city officials, the Health Board and all of those supposed to be responsible for the public welfare should acquire the information that is open to them and remedy the evils that exist.

Parlez-vous le Francais?

You NEED Not, to See the Point of This. It is Translated.

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner

The best fighter, best practical thinker, wittiest intellectual fencer and hardest worker, with very few exceptions in all this world's history, was the thin, little Frenchman who changed his name from Arouet to Voltaire, and who did more than any other ONE man to change France from a monarchy to a republic.

Hard worker as he was, and great "doer" as he was, Voltaire saw his own weaknesses, rebuked himself for work neglected and wrote these four lines about himself:

Nous tromper dans nos enterprises,
C'est a quoi nous sommes sujets;
Le matin je fais des projets,
Et le long du jour des sottises.

The meaning of the lines is about as follows:

To deceive ourselves in our undertakings we are all inclined. In the morning I make plans, and throughout the day I commit follies.

Thus Voltaire spoke of HIMSELF, not of others.

And because he DID criticise himself and see and ridicule his own weakness he died the greatest and strongest man of all Europe.

It is worth while to study, understand and fight our own tendency to faire des projets le matin and faire des sottises throughout the day.

The Contrast

Millions for a Stock Watering Scheme, but Nothing for a Legitimate Enterprise. A Lesson From Two Recent Events in Boston

The decision by the promoters of the steamship merger not to put quite so much water in the new issue of securities as they originally proposed illustrates very clearly the power of public opinion when aroused as it recently was by the Chamber of Commerce, the Massachusetts Board of Trade and the Boston AMERICAN against a stock watering job highly inimical to the public interests.

But the promoters of this deal have not mollified public opinion by drawing off only part of the water in their new company. The time has passed when the American people will tolerate, if they know it, the existence of any water at all in our transportation or other public service corporations.

Doubtless before the promoters have completed their plans they will have drained their scheme of all its water.

But the incident calls attention to an extraordinary situation in this community.

Here is a group of successful financial men and bankers who expected to be able to raise from this community more than six million dollars representing not a single steamship or wharf or any other substantial asset.

On the other hand we recently failed to raise a much smaller sum than this as our share in the financing of the proposed steamship line between Boston and Texas.

The people at the South were so confident of the success of this enterprise that they stood ready to raise their share of the funds necessary to finance the steamship line.

The leading business men of Boston and New England believed it would pay and recognized the great commercial and industrial advantage such a line would give to New England. Yet, strange and unaccountable as it seems, sufficient capital could not be raised here to bring such a line into being without a dollar's worth of water in the capitalization.

These facts constitute a significant warning to our people against the dangerous power of a money monopoly. Those leading business men who, for the good of New England, attempted to raise our part of the necessary capital believed that their failure was due to the hostility of the railroad interests, which did not want any independent competition by water for the business of the ports at the South.

The chairman of the Directors of the Port of Boston pointed out the other night at the City Club that on non-perishable freight, which is the bulk of the freight, Boston is nearer the greater part of our population even than Chicago.

The reason is that for the purposes of transporting freight, distances are measured by the cost of transportation. The cost by land is nearly twelve times the cost by water, therefore freight can be carried from Boston to the ports of the South and shipped inland to fifty-two million people, while at the same rate of cost Chicago can serve only thirty-nine millions of the ninety-one millions which comprise our total population.

The people of New England may thus understand what a splendid thing it would be for this community to have an independent transportation line by water to the South and how well it would pay. By the same token they can understand why the railroads are opposed to the establishment of such a line.

It is natural that railroad managers like Mr. Mellen should oppose it even though they know it to be highly in the public interest. They would be more than human if they did not oppose it. We call them no names on this account.

But the conditions which enabled their opposition to be successful call for serious thought on the part of our citizens.

Bankers and promoters can raise enough money to float a reorganization scheme on more than six millions of water, while an enterprise endorsed by the best business minds of the community failed because we could not raise a million and a half as our share of the cost of an undertaking which would mean so much to the prosperity of New England.

The money in both cases would have been the people's money, just as all these great enterprises are always floated on the people's money held by the banks or the insurance companies or brokerage houses.

Those who control this money, the people's money, have a power too great to be safe if they had never abused it. But that they do abuse it the fate of the independent steamship line to Texas affords us significant and painful evidence.
